Tacoma utility revives Wiley hydro project

By N. S. NOKKENTVED
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – A Tacoma utility's plans would resurrect a hydroelectric project on the Snake River near Bliss.

Tacoma City Light, in conjunction with the City of Idaho Falls' Electric Light Division, plans to submit a new application to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for a preliminary permit to build an 86-megawatt dam at the A.J. Wiley site.

The Tacoma utility's earlier plan for a dam at Wiley were halted when the Idaho Legislature in 1988 passed a two-year interim protection on parts of the Snake, including the Murtaugh-to-King Hill stretch.

The law protects selected portions of the river from development while the state Water Resources Board develops a comprehensive river plan for the state. The interim protection on the Magic Valley stretch, however, expires this July.

Another stumbling block to the project, said Resource Development Coordinator Garth Jackson of Tacoma City Light, "is that Idahoans like to see Idaho resources used in Idaho."

The Tacoma utility has teamed up with Idaho Falls in a effort to ease that kind of opposition, the utility's Resource Development Manager Gary Johnson said.

City Light was looking for someone to pick up more than half the project, said Idaho Falls Electric Division Manager Steve Harrison. But final arrangements for financing and the type of relationship between the two utilities has not yet been determined.

The Idaho Falls utility generates enough power to serve only about half its need, Harrison said. The rest it buys from the Bonneville Power Administration, which markets power from federal dams on the Columbia River.

Earlier plans for the dam at Wiley called for a dam 100 feet high, storing about 24,000 acre-feet of water. The resulting lake would reach to the base of the Lower Salmon Dam, about eight miles upstream.

Opponents to those earlier plans raised issues of geological instability in the area, which could lead to leaks and possible failure of a propose earthen dam. Other issues were the dam's impact on Snake River sturgeon and white-water recreation.

Idaho Power Co. also applied for a license at the same site in the early 1980s. Despite Idaho Power's contention that delays or denials would hurt the utility's ability to meet Idaho's growing demand for power, the license was denied.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission denied the license because Idaho Power could not show a need for additional generating capacity at the time.

'Devil got me,' fire suspect says

The Associated Press

Last moments – A6

NEW YORK — The man accused of setting fire to the Happy Land social club was arraigned Monday on 87 counts of murder, and police said he told them "the devil got into me."

Authorities began shutting other illegal clubs in response to New York City's worst fire in 79 years.

The families of the 87 victims, most of whom were Honduran or Dominican immigrants, sought solace in their grief, and a government task force was set up to counsel them and help make funeral arrangements.

Julio Gonzalez, 36, was accused of setting the fire early Sunday with $1 worth of gasoline after arguing with a former girlfriend who worked at the illegal club. He is said to have threatened to "shut this place down."

GONZALEZ

"I got angry, the devil got into me, and I set the place on fire," Gonzalez told authorities, according to a police source who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

During a hearing at Bronx County Criminal Court, Gonzalez was charged with 87 counts of murder committed during the course of arson; 87 counts of murder by depraved indifference to human life; one count of attempted murder; and two counts of arson.

He was held under a suicide watch at the Rikers Island jail, authorities said. The case was turned over to a grand jury, and Gonzalez will not be asked to enter a plea unless an indictment is issued.

The deaths were believed to be the most ever charged to a single suspect in the continental United States.

"He is a double animal," said Rene J. Mena, 63, whose son, Rene Jr., 30, died. "Here, they're going to have good food for him, a book, a movie. In Central America, we don't do it that way."

District Attorney Robert T. Johnson said he hoped that if Gonzalez is convicted, he would get consecutive prison sentences amounting to 2,000 years.

An equally angry Mayor David Dinkins ordered a sweep of other suspected unlicensed social clubs. Police and a special task force visited 241 clubs citywide from midnight to 7 a.m. Monday and posted vacate orders on 187.

Only 23 of the clubs were open — most are closed on Sunday nights. There were 52 safety violations and 30 summonses issued, said Sgt. Dick Vreeland, a police spokesman.

In the East Tremont section of the Bronx, families drifted in and out of Public School 67, across from the fire-blackened club. A task force of state, city and private agencies there helped them make funeral arrangements and offered counseling and financial assistance.

"It's orderly, but it's not emotionally orderly," said Ken Curtin, a local Red Cross disaster relief director. "It's highly charged. There are a lot of outbursts of grief."

Paratroops beat, arrest deserters

The Associated Press

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — Soviet paratroopers stormed a psychiatric hospital before dawn Tuesday and captured about two dozen Lithuanians who had sought refuge there after deserting the Soviet army upon Lithuania's declaration of independence.

Some of the young men were beaten bloody, witnesses said, and a trail of blood led down the steps and out the front door of the hospital.

It was the first report of violence in the confrontation between Lithuania and the Kremlin that began March 11 with Lithuania's attempt to secede from the union.

A nurse said 10 to 15 of the approximately 38 men who had been staying at the hospital escaped.

"They beat them with their fists," a duty nurse said of the Soviet soldiers who broke into the hospital about 3 a.m. She refused to give her name. "I was afraid they would shoot me too."

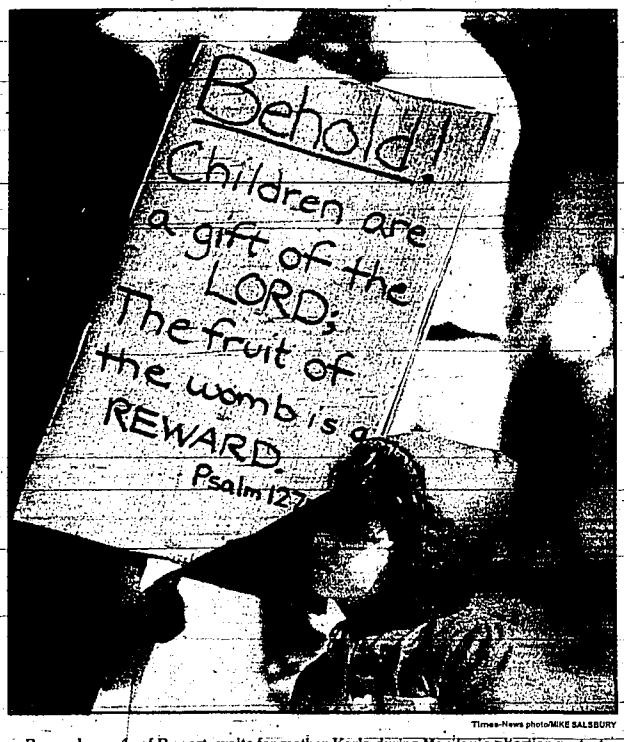

On Monday, Soviet troops occupied another Communist Party building in Lithuania and an army helicopter dropped leaflets in the republic's capital calling for an anti-secession demonstration.

Lithuanian leaders meanwhile began talks with the Soviet army about their standoff with Moscow since declaring independence two weeks ago.

Sen. Edward Kennedy said in Moscow that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev reiterated his pledge not to use force except to save lives in the breakaway Baltic republic.

Lithuanian Deputy Premier Romualdas Ozolas, one of two officials who met two Soviet military officers Monday, told reporters: "After coming out of this meeting, I

Pro-life protesters march at Rupert doctor's office

By JENNIFER KAUTH
Times-News writer

RUPERT – Pro-life protesters marched Monday outside the office of the only Magic Valley physician who acknowledges performing abortions.

"It's an outrage that it's happening in our community," said Wanda Knopp of Rupert, the group's spokeswoman.

Carrying homemade signs with anti-abortion slogans, adults and children patrolled the road's edge behind the office of Dr. Edward Boas.

The protestors said they were there to educate the public, to educate Boas' patients and to tell Boas that people disapproved of his giving abortions. The group plans to picket at least through Friday, Knopp said.

Knopp said the protesters decided to act after reading about Boas in The Times-News. Boas said in a recent newspaper interview that he had performed 90 abortions in the past 11 months.

Signs boasted slogans such as "I'm opposed to Dr. Boas performing abortions," "Dr. Boas when does life begin?" and "Give babies a chance."

"I'm one of the lucky ones," read one child's sign.

Peggy Holbrook's sign encouraged pregnant women to choose adoption over abortion.

"I would have had any one of those 90 babies he aborted," the 39-year-old Rupert woman said. "And I know friends who can't."

Andrus to consult experts on bill

The Associated Press

BOISE — Gov. Cecil Andrus, under mounting pressure from the public and his own family, said Monday he'll consult outside experts before deciding whether to sign the nation's most restrictive state abortion law.

"It's a major piece of legislation that cannot be looked on lightly," Andrus told reporters in his first public statement on the bill since it won final legislative approval Thursday.

The Democratic governor reiterated that he hadn't made up his mind on the bill, which bans abortion as birth control. But he reaffirmed his longstanding opposition to abortion except in cases of rape, incest and to save a life — the main exceptions cited in the bill.

In other action Monday, a civil rights attorney praised a federal judge's extension until May of a restraining order against enforcing Guam's new abortion statute, the most restrictive U.S. law.

"There's no doubt in my mind that lower federal courts will find this law unconstitutional," Rachael Pine, staff attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union's Reproductive Freedom Project, said in a telephone interview from New York.

The Idaho bill was going through final clerical procedures in the Legislature on Monday, and was not expected to reach Andrus' desk until today. The governor said he wanted to talk to outside experts first, but declined to identify them.

Once the Legislature adjourns, which is expected Wednesday night or Thursday, he will have 10 days to make a decision.

If Andrus decides not to act on the bill, it becomes law and would take effect July 1.

'Miss Daisy' wins film Oscar; acting awards to Tandy, Lewis

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Driving Miss Daisy," the heartwarming story of a crotchety Jewish widow and her growing friendship with her patient black chauffeur, won the Oscar as best picture Monday.

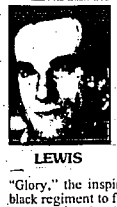

It also brought top acting honors to Jessica Tandy.

Daniel Day-Lewis was named best actor for his role as an artist battling cerebral palsy in "My Left Foot."

Oliver Stone was honored as best director for "Born on the Fourth of July," the story of a Vietnam soldier's transformation from bitter paraplegic to anti-war activist. It was the second such prize in three years for Stone, who won three years ago for the anti-Vietnam epic "Platoon."

TANDY

STONE

"My deepest thanks for your acknowledgment that Vietnam is not over, though some people say it is," said Stone.

Denzel Washington, the runaway slave turned soldier in "Glory," and Brenda Fricker, as artist Christy Brown's devoted mother in "My Left Foot," won for best supporting performances at the 62nd annual Academy Awards.

"I never expected in a million years that I would be in this position. It's a miracle!" said Miss Tandy, who at 80 becomes the oldest performer to win an Oscar. The slender, white-haired actress received a standing ovation from the crowd that packed the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion of the Los Angeles Music Center.

The awards were spread in unusually even fashion. "Miss Daisy" also won for screenplay adaptation and makeup, making it the night's leader with four Oscars.

"Glory," the inspirational story of the first black regiment to fight in the Civil War, also won trophies for cinematography and sound, to finish with three. It was not nominated for best picture.

"My son said he was going to make one of these out of clay for me, now I've got a model for him," an exultant Washington said as he held up his gold statuette, first award of the evening.

Washington becomes the fourth black performer to win an Oscar. Previous black winners were Hattie McDaniel for "Gone With the Wind," in 1939 and Louis Gossett Jr. for "An Officer and a Gentleman" in 1982, in supporting categories, and Sidney Poitier for "Lilies of the Field" in 1963 as lead actor.

"I don't believe this!" exclaimed the Dublin-born Miss Fricker as she came on stage.

She added her thanks to artist-writer "Christy Brown, just for being alive, and to his mother, Mrs. Brown. Anybody who gives birth 22 times deserves one," she said, referring to the Oscar.

Alfred Uhry, who adapted his own Pulitzer Prize-winning play, won the screenplay adaptation award for "Driving Miss Daisy," Tom Schulman, the author of "Dead Poet's Society," won for best original screenplay.

"Born on the Fourth of July," took honors for film editing.

"Henry V" took the prize for costume design.

Disney's much-praised animated fairy tale, "The Little Mermaid" won two Oscars — best song for the calypso "Under the Sea," and best original score.

FBI rounds up top mob figures

BOSTON (AP) — An FBI sweep through three states on Monday netted New England's top organized crime boss, culminating a five-year probe in which investigators taped the Mafia's solemn blood initiation rite, authorities said.

The 113-count indictments naming 21 alleged mobsters were especially significant for their extensive description of the induction ceremony, said U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh.

FBI agents fanned out Monday over Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut to arrest the alleged criminals on a range of charges including murder, racketeering, kidnapping, drug trafficking, gambling, obstruction of justice and witness intimidation.

McClures join Bushes over dinner

FALLS CHURCH, Va. (AP) — President Bush and his wife Barbara returned to one of their favorite spots, the Peking Gourmet Inn, for dinner Monday night.

Attorney Gen. Dick Thornburgh and Sens. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., and James McClure, R-Idaho, and their wives joined the Bushes on the outing to the Chinese restaurant in this suburb 10 miles outside the capital.

The Bushes frequented the restaurant before he became president, and have returned about a half-dozen times in the past 15 months.

Japan offers U.S. ways to compete

TOKYO (AP) — Japan has suggested the United States tax more, wean itself from energy-wasting cars and limit the use of credit cards among 80 proposals for competing better with the Japanese, a newspaper reported Monday.

The proposals were made during recent unofficial talks between U.S. and Japanese trade negotiators in Warrenton, Va., to discuss economic reforms aimed at shrinking the trade imbalance, the Yomiuri Shimbun reported.

The measures were aimed at cutting the $49 billion U.S. trade deficit, curbing excessive consumer spending and helping balance the federal budget, the nationally circulated newspaper said.

The Japanese Foreign Ministry had no comment on the report.

Fighting intensifies in Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Three days after the U.S.-backed Contras signed an agreement to disband by mid-April, fighting has intensified and a rebel leader said Monday 2,000 Contras have returned to Nicaragua since the accord.

International observers and witnesses say rebel bases across the border from Nicaragua in Yamales, Honduras, are practically empty.

The Contra leader who negotiated the demobilization pact, Oscar Sovalbarro, said 2,000 rebel fighters have returned since the accord was signed Friday.

Michigan woman brings spuds, message

The Associated Press

BOISE (AP) — A Michigan woman is flying to Boise with a half bag of potatoes and a message for Gov. Cecil Andrus concerning his upcoming decision on abortion legislation.

"I want to tell him this is only the beginning," Gwen Dempsey of Waterford, Mich, said Monday.

Ms. Dempsey, who is scheduled to reach Boise today, said if Andrus signs what could become the most restrictive anti-abortion law of all 50 states, women across the nation are prepared to quit buying Idaho's biggest crop.

Ms. Dempsey, a Republican candidate for the Michigan Senate, said she was scheduled to meet with Andrus' chief of staff, Mike Mitchell, to discuss the economic consequences if the governor signs HB 625 passed by the Senate on Thursday.

"If it could happen in Idaho, it could happen in another state," she said. "We've got to nip this thing in the bud right now."

However, if the governor vetoes the bill that would outlaw abortion as a method of birth control, Ms. Dempsey said she would be happy to have a baked potato for dinner Tuesday.

"Anytime someone threatens one of our major cash crops, we respond," Andrus said Monday. "It does have an impact, but it's too soon to tell.

Abortion

The legislation would ban abortion except in cases involving a threat to the woman's life or physical health; severe fetal deformity; incest if the victim is under 18; and nonstatutory rape reported within seven days.

The legislation, based on a National Right to Life Committee model rejected by other states as too restrictive, carries civil penalties against doctors performing illegal abortions.

Abortion rights advocates maintain the bill is unconstitutionally restrictive and have promised an immediate legal challenge should it become law. That would give anti-abortion forces the court test they want of the U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion.

Since the bill's approval last week, the governor's office has been deluged by telephone calls and letters, including threats by abortion rights advocates to boycott Idaho's No. 1 cash crop: potatoes.

Each time he opens his office door, Andrus said, he's handed more messages about the legislation.

While working in his front yard on Sunday, a passing car screeched to a halt "and the lady ... gave me the benefit of her wisdom," he said.

Even in his own family, Andrus said, "There is a difference of opinion. ... My family is no different" than others throughout the state and nation that have become divided over the abortion question.

Andrus refused to say where his wife and three grown daughters stood.

"This issue has a tendency to polarize people more than anything I've seen," he said, rating it as one of the most pressurized issues he has had to deal with in 30 years of state and federal government service.

"It's a no-win situation."

He said the threats of boycotts cannot be ignored, any more than the nightly candlelight vigils that abortion rights activists have been holding outside the Capitol since the eve of Thursday's vote.

"I don't enjoy the threat of a boycott," Andrus said. "But that type of reactionary measure is normal in cases like this. I would hope it wouldn't generate that much steam or interest."

In Guam, U.S. District Judge Alex Munson on Monday extended his temporary restraining order until May 8, when the trial of a lawsuit over that Pacific Ocean island territory's abortion law is set to begin.

Munson issued the order Friday after the class-action lawsuit was filed by Guam medical groups and a group of Guam residents.

The law prohibits abortions except when a pregnancy endangers a woman's life. It makes it a third-degree felony to perform an abortion or aid in the procedure, a misdemeanor for a woman to solicit or have an abortion and a misdemeanor for a person to solicit a woman to have an abortion.

Abortion opponents see the statute, which was signed into law March 19, as another potential vehicle for a U.S. Supreme Court test of Roe vs. Wade.

Pine, the ACLU attorney, also expressed fear the Guam case could have that effect if it reaches the high court.

"We could win the battle and lose the war," she said.

can say the mood has changed."

"It is evident the conflict will not be escalated," he said.

But Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis was more skeptical. He said he had not received clear assurances that no more buildings would be occupied and that the talks would mainly function "to avoid conflict between the military and citizens."

Moreover, in a separate interview with the U.S. National Public Radio, Landsbergis said the situation had become "very dangerous" in the light of Gorbachev's reported remarks to Kennedy.

"Before he always said that he would not use force in Lithuania, but now we have a situation where he's qualifying that statement and setting a condition under which he could use force."

Soviet television said Monday that Soviet helicopters have been patrolling Lithuania's borders daily because of reports that "territorial guard forces," set up by the popular independence movement Sajudis, have been erecting border signs.

Paratroopers appeared in Vilnius on Sunday at the Higher Party School and the Institute of Marxism-Leninism. Lithuanian officials said there also were soldiers at the Vilnius Communist Party headquarters.

Ozolas said that during the talks, the army said it occupied the buildings at the request of Lithuanian Communists who remain loyal to Moscow. The majority of the party split with Moscow in December.

have babies who would bless the (natural) mother the rest of her life."

"I'm here because I want everyone else to know what Dr. Boas is doing," said Karla Jesse, 32, of Rupert. "And to tell him to stop doing them (abortions) or we'll keep going until we ruin his practice."

"I don't think it will have a negative effect," Boas said.

Knopp said the group was not affiliated with Operation Rescue or any other national pro-life organization. She said the picketing's purpose is to convince Boas to stop giving abortions, not to harass possible abortion patients or others.

Monday morning, a dozen adults and nine children picketed. Knopp said the group grew to about 50 by the day's end.

Rupert Police Chief Paul Fries visited the protesters and cautioned them to keep the children away from the road and not to block driveways. Monday evening, Fries said the day of picketing had passed without incident.

Boas said he had expected to be picketed about six months ago. But now that the Legislature has passed House Bill 625 – the bill that prohibits abortion as a from of birth control – the protesters are "just out there for the publicity," he said.

"This is after the fact," he said. "It's all over and done with. The Legislature has already made a decision and now it's just up to the legal people."

"I respect their opinion, and they can have their opinion, but I wish they'd respect my opinion," Boas said.

Boas said he will follow the law if Gov. Cecil Andrus signs the bill.

He said he has no regrets about going public with his stand on abortion. He has received about six negative letters since going public last week, but he also has received a number of positive phone calls, he said.

But he said he has heard indirectly that a few of his patients won't be returning to his office.

The two patients in Boas' waiting room Monday morning said they will remain loyal.

"We're for him all they way," Tim Bickell of Burley said. "We think he's the best doctor around."

Today's weather

Twin Falls, Burley, Rupert, Jerome and Gooding:

Today and tonight partly cloudy. A slight chance of showers or thundershowers. Highs near 60. Lows in the upper 20s, winds Today variable 5 to 15 mph. Wednesday mostly sunny. Highs in the upper 50s.

Camas Prairie and Wood River Valley:

Today and tonight partly cloudy with a slight chance of showers or thundershowers. Highs in the 50s. Lows in the upper teens to the mid-20s. Wednesday mostly sunny. Highs in the lower to mid-50s.

Extended forecast: Southern Idaho — Partly cloudy Thursday, fair Friday and Saturday. Highs 55 to 65. Lows mostly in the 30s.

Northern Utah and Nevada:

Utah — Today and Wednesday considerable cloudiness with widely scattered showers or thundershowers today, becoming a little more numerous Wednesday. Cooler days. High today low 60s. Low at night 35-40. High Wednesday 55-60. Probability of measurable rain 20 percent today, then 30 percent Wednesday.

Nevada — Partly cloudy today with isolated afternoon showers east. Fair skies tonight. Mostly sunny west and partly cloudy with a few afternoon showers east on Wednesday. Highs upper 50s and 60s. Overnight lows mid-20s to mid-30s.

Summary:

The National Weather Service says Idahoans can expect typical early spring weather.

A weak Pacific storm system centered over Oregon is expected to move slowly southeast, skirting the southern portion of Idaho. As the storm center moves along the southern border it will set off a few showers and thundershowers. Meanwhile, northern Idaho will remain mostly fair under high pressure.

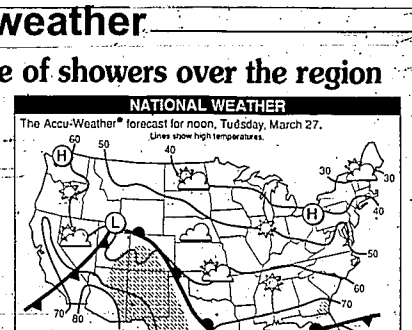

Monday morning skies were partly cloudy in the south and generally clear in the north.

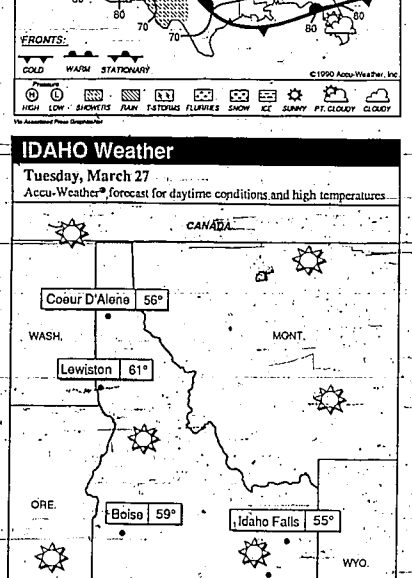

Surface winds were mostly light around the state this morning. The exceptions were Burley and Twin Falls where east winds were blowing at 15 to 20 mph.

No rain was reported in the state during the past 24 hours. The pollen count in Twin Falls Monday was 19 particles per cubic meter of air.

The warmest temperature in the state Monday was 71 degrees at Hagerman. Dixie reported the coldest at 3 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Monday, the highest temperature was 94 degrees at Bullhead City, Ariz. The lowest was 1 degree above zero at West Yellowstone, Wyo.

Statistics show incidence of AIDS in Idaho on the rise

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Every few minutes, Idaho Falls nurse epidemiologist Wanda Evans is interrupted by a phone call.

The person calling the 7th District Health Department invariably seeks test results for sexually transmitted diseases. But it is the human immuno-deficiency virus that causes AIDS that worries such callers most, Evans says.

Just over 3,000 have taken the test since 1985, and more people are testing positive for HIV and showing up as statistics in the state's bi-weekly surveillance reports.

HIV infection is the first stage in a process that leads to AIDS.

"Within 10 years, everyone in Idaho will know someone who is infected by AIDS," Evans said. "It will be either a friend or a family member."

Between 1987, when the eight-county district started keeping records, and Feb. 27, eight people in the district have tested positive for HIV. Five are living in Bonneville County and two of those have tested positive since Jan. 1.

"Those are eight people that we know of," Ms. Evans said. "Simple math tells you there have to be at least eight more out there who have the virus."

She said it is virtually certain that those who test positive for HIV will acquire AIDS in time, usually between six months and nine years. Up to 70 percent of those who manifest AIDS symptoms have died within two years, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

To date, the total number of AIDS cases reported in Idaho stands at 58, with 31 deaths reported. Of the 58, 52 were male and six were female. Two children under 12 are among the victims.

Most people who have contracted AIDS belong to what have been identified as high-risk groups: male homosexuals or bisexuals and intravenous drug users who share needles.

A person who tests positive for HIV gets counseling about the options for treatment, said Kathy Virgil, who heads District 7's reproductive health program. Although most of the known cases are monitored by the Health Department, great care is taken to maintain anonymity, she said.

"The bottom line is, yes, AIDS is here. It is cutting across socio-economic, racial and sexual lines. No one is immune from the risk," Ms. Virgil said.

She said her greatest concern is with teen-agers, whom she predicts may become the next high-risk group.

"Sexually active teen-agers have a 1 in 5 chance of getting a sexually transmitted disease," Virgil said. "Many are either involved with drugs or are involved with those who are."

No teen-agers in District 7 have tested positive for HIV yet, Ms. Virgil said.

"But we have people in their early 20s dying, so they had to have acquired the virus in their teens," she said.

Idaho Legislature 1990

BOISE (AP) — Gov. Cecil Andrus has signed a compromise bill that raises Idaho's minimum wage for the first time in 13 years and boosts minimum wage and overtime benefits for thousands of federally covered employees.

"It wasn't easy," the governor said Monday. "This is a decided improvement over what we had."

Under the bill, the current $2.30-an-hour state minimum will rise to $3.80 next Sunday. The wage rises again on April 1, 1990, to $4.25, reflecting the new federal minimum wage levels approved by Congress.

But the Idaho law, while directly affecting only about 25,000 members of the 500,000 people in the state's civilian labor force, will cover all workers as far as overtime and tip compensation are concerned. Its provisions on those issues are broader than those in the federal law.

The Idaho tip credit beginning Sunday will be 25 percent compared to 45 percent the first year and 50 percent after that in the federal law. That means the minimum wage will be cut to cover tips for Idaho workers in industries like food service to $2.85 an hour for the coming year.

The requirement that employers pay time-and-a-half for work in excess of 40 hours a week also is subject to fewer exemptions in the Idaho statute than in the federal law.

Some business interests have been pushing new legislation to increase the overtime exemptions in the Idaho law, but Andrus said it appeared to be rather late in the 1990 session to be initiating a new bill.

The new state minimum wage law represented compromises on both sides as organized labor agreed to accept for the first time in Idaho the tip credit provision. Industry agreed to the overtime section and exclusion of any so-called training wage.

Auditor enters race to see job finished

BOISE (AP) — In the midst of updating the state's accounting system, Democratic state Auditor J.D. Williams on Monday announced his race for re-election to see the job through.

The administrator of $2.6 billion in state bills each year, and payrolls for 16,000 state employees, Williams said his department is adjusting to a new IBM mainframe computer and fine-tuning its approach.

"It's important to have a steady hand at the helm in coming years and that's why I want to be our state's auditor-chief financial officer during this critical period," he said in Boise before driving to Pocatello for an press conference.

The former Preston mayor was appointed last March by Gov. Cecil Andrus to succeed retiring Auditor Joe Williams, a distant cousin. Joe Williams will serve as J.D. Williams' campaign chairman. Eldon Golightly of Preston is the only announced Republican in the race.

The new computer has shrunk the cost of computer time to other state agencies from $1,800 to $900 an hour.

A more fundamental change that will serve state residents is due this summer and will take two years to complete. During that time the state will shift its accounting method from cash to an accrual system.

The change essentially will mean citizens will have an easier time understanding the state's finances.

Faced with thousands of dollars in claims from disgruntled farmers hard hit by big game depredation, Williams said his background in cattle and sheep ranching enabled him to help work out a resolution for the state.

A member of the State Land Board, Williams recently refused to vote concerning grazing fees on state property, saying his relatives were part of a grazing association completing a land trade with the federal government involving state acres.

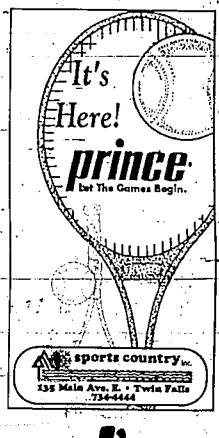

Williams said Monday he would refrain from any decision on grazing fees for now. But the board should take up the matter by the end of this year, and by then, the land trade would be accomplished.

Sprague says Corps distorts facts about dig

MOSCOW (AP) — The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers was playing loose with the truth when it announced a "" supposed agreement with the Nez Perce Indian Tribe to preserve a prehistoric winter village near Orofino, a University of Idaho archaeologist says.

The Corps is building a $16 million hatchery below Dworshak Dam on the Clearwater River, a site that UI researchers and Nez Perce believe could be the last major undisturbed Nez Perce winter village along the river.

The tribe has sued the Corps in federal court to force it to excavate a representative sample of the ruins before finishing the hatchery. The Corps announced Friday the agreement in principle had been reached and that the suit would be dismissed.

Negotiated settlement for depredation passes; funding question sent to panel

BOISE (AP) — A bill implementing a negotiated settlement to Idaho's big game depredation controversy has won final legislative approval in the House, despite funding for the plan being sidetracked in committee.

The legislation developed last year by a 12-member committee representing landowners and sportsmen in response to farm and ranch damage from marauding wildlife was approved 49-32 Monday and sent to Gov. Cecil Andrus.

But there was little enthusiasm for the measure even from supporters, who acknowledged changes to the law it creates might have to be changed later if problems arise.

"This, I think, is as good a compromise as we could get," said Rep. Golden Linford, R-Rexburg.

The bill outlines procedures for financing, filing and payment of claims for landowners damaged by big game, including a provision for the state to deposit $1 million into a trust fund to pay off the largest claims.

But the House Appropriations Committee voted 6-5 Monday to hold a Senate-passed bill allocating that one-time money. Rep. Ray Infanger, R-Salmon, argued in committee and on the House floor that the funding was unnecessary. Depredation problems have been only minor since the winter of 1988-89, when the statewide debate was sparked, he said.

"I cannot see tying up that much money for something that happens, I don't know, I suppose every hundred years," Infanger said. "I think we got all psyched up over nothing."

Supporters, however, said the funding bill was an essential ingredient of the settlement, and its rejection might threaten support for the agreement from groups involved in the negotiations.

"I think we should make every effort to get that out of the committee," said House Agricultural Affairs Chairman Wayne Sutton, R-Midvale, the settlement bill's floor sponsor. "This agreement represents a very delicate balance, and it's got to be viewed as a package."

The compensation program, ironed out over months of mediated talks, requires landowners to deduct the first $1,000 of any losses each winter.

After the deductible, the next $9,000 in losses would be compensated, from a fund of $200,000 diverted from Department of Fish and Game hunting and fishing license fees. If total claims in that range exceed the $200,000 annual limit, they will be paid off proportionately to each claimant.

Claims for more than $10,000 will be paid from a secondary depredation fund comprised of the $1 million in general account revenue and $1.25 million in interest earned on investment of Fish and Game license fees.

That interest would be diverted into the fund and capped at $250,000 a year, so it will take at least five years to meet the department's financial requirement. The interest from license fees receipts currently is being deposited into the general state treasury.

To qualify for compensation, landowners will have had to provide hunters with "reasonable access" to their land during the season before the damage occurred.

Among other provisions, the bill establishes a permanent 12-member advisory committee to monitor depredation conditions and serve as a liaison between landowners, the state departments of Fish and Game and Agriculture, and sportsmen's organizations.

Officials investigate accidental shooting

POCATELLO (AP) — The investigation into the apparently accidental shooting death of a 16-year-old jogger in Bannock County will take several weeks, authorities say.

A 12-year-old boy reportedly was hunting early Saturday afternoon when a bullet from his gun struck Jennifer Mauger in the chest. The shooting took place near the Bannock County town of Robin, Sheriff Bill Lynn said.

The gun will be examined and the youngster will undergo a lie detector test. No charges have been filed.

Disney leads falcon conservation group

BOISE (AP) — Roy Disney, the nephew of the founder of Disneyland, has been named chairman of the board for The Peregrine Fund, Inc.

The fund is a nonprofit conservation organization for the protection of peregrine falcons and other raptors. Its headquarters is located at the World Center for Birds of Prey near Boise.

Disney's interest in birds of prey is long-standing. Involved in making motion pictures for Disney, he filmed "Varda the Peregrine Falcon" in 1970, which brought international attention to the looming demise of the bird.

Disney is the nephew of the late Walt Disney. He joined the Peregrine board in 1988.

Radford runs for House

BOISE (AP) — Dave Radford of Idaho Falls, the state Senate's sergeant at arms, says he plans to run this year for the Idaho House of Representatives.

Radford is running for the District 33 House floterial seat being vacated by Rep. Stan Hawkins, R-Ucon, who is seeking a Senate seat.

Robert Stevens

Idaho citizens are preparing for hearings on the proposed Saylor Creek Bombing Range expansion. These hearings are on the Air Force's Tier I draft Environmental Impact Statement from which a number of critical decisions will be made, including whether or not to allow supersonic flights above 5,000 feet in Idaho military air space, whether to allow subsonic flights as low as 100 feet above the ground and whether or not a larger bombing range is needed.

The Air Force is looking at a huge parcel of land – almost three million acres – for the bombing range. Much of the land is federal public land, a significant portion is Idaho state land and some is privately owned.

If you are an upland bird hunter, fisherman, ORV user, rock hound, bighorn sheep watcher or hunter, deer hunter, antelope hunter, aviator, white-water rafter, camper, miner, archaeologist, birdwatcher or environmentalist, these decisions are of concern to you.

What do we have to look forward to if the Air Force gets supersonic flights, low-level flights and a large bombing range?

We can go down to Owyhee County and listen to an average of 49 supersonic "pops" per day and see jets speeding along just 100 feet above ground level.

However, if we want to see or hear jets, we won't have to travel to Owyhee – there will be a 900 percent increase in jet traffic over the northern Wood River Valley.

We may have a hard time seeing any of the 1,140 California bighorn sheep that live in the river drainages because they don't seem to get along well with jets. Those sheep are a living testament to successful transplanting done by the state of Idaho and the North American Foundation for Wild Sheep.

We may also have a hard time seeing the elk, deer, antelope, sage grouse, chukar partridge, quail, water fowl and other wildlife which live in Owyhee – not just because loss of habitat, fire and noise will disrupt their lives but because our access to the area will be regulated.

One of Owyhee's oldest and most traditional enterprises, cattle ranching, will suffer. Many of these folks will be a thing of the past if the Air Force is allowed to expand the bombing range. All of Idaho will lose if these ranchers are displaced.

Multiple use, as described by the Air Force in the Tier I EIS, just won't work. And this is only one of many pieces of misinformation disseminated by the Air Force.

The Air Force says that the closing of the George Air Force Base in California and the moving of the 94 F4G aircraft from George to Mountain Home is reason enough to commandeer Owyhee County. Nowhere have they adequately explained the connection between the moving of the F4s and the proposed airspace and land takeover.

How do we beat the single most detrimental proposal ever to affect southern Idaho's lands and quality of life?

We all attend public hearings and voice our opinions. The Blaine County hearing is from 6 to 10 p.m. Wednesday, March 28; and the Twin Falls hearing is from 7 to 11 p.m. Tuesday, April 3, at the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts auditorium. There will also be hearings in Boise, Glenn's Ferry, Grandview and Mountain Home.

And, we all write letters and submit them before the April 16 deadline. No special expertise is needed – just make your opinion clear. Send letters to Mr. Al Chavis, HQ TAC/DEEV, Langley AFB, Va. 23665-5001.

Also, we must write all our congressional delegates and our governor. Don't wait – do it now! Please!

Merle Stoddard

Thirty years ago, I opened the Magic Valley Easter Seal Center. We worked with handicapped children. When my last child was a baby, I made the statement that I was tired of the diaper stage. One father spoke up and said, "How would you like to have a baby for 30 years?"

These children I worked with were loved and wanted, who had accidents at birth, illnesses after birth or genetic problems. We discovered at that time we could help some of these children and their parents to compensate for their problems, but we could never reverse the brain damage they suffered.

I worked with a boy for 25 years. He was a normal boy at birth; but at six weeks, he had "Sleeping Sickness." He had a temperature of over 104 degrees; his brain was burned.

His dad would bring him in the mornings. I would work with him. When his mother came to pick him up to go to special education, she could understand his speech. By the time she got him to school, he was back to his gibberish. He could not retain what he had learned. He really wanted to learn to read, but he couldn't retain it.

A graduate student who helped me at the center after studying the neurological effects of prenatal care said, "No wonder my first child had a learning problem. I was very poor and I was hungry all the time I was pregnant. I didn't have enough milk to feed him after he was born." If a woman has malnutrition and is forced to have a baby, we have to expect a brain-damaged child.

The effects of cigarette smoking and alcohol were beginning to show. Over several generations, oxygen deprivation was beginning to reap its toll.

When I lectured to the CSI classes, I warned the women not to smoke or drink alcohol during pregnancy. The beer dealers were very mad at me. Now we know the consequences.

With all the new drugs and chemical damages to the brain of the fetus, there are much more severe damages. When the brain of the fetus is damaged, there is no way to restore it.

When the pro-life people demand that the drug addict or the poor woman must carry a baby to term; that baby, with its wriggling withdrawals and its horrendous pain, is their responsibility.

They must be proud that they forced this baby to suffer! If we work very hard, maybe by the time he is 3 or 4, we will be able to teach him to walk; and by 6 or 7, he might learn to say words – but he will never have the ability to look ahead and be responsible for his actions. That part of the brain was destroyed before he was born.

Many of the throwaway kids here in Idaho do not have the capacity to understand the consequences of their actions. They need the closeness and solace of a sexual relationship and will propagate many more children, not understanding what they are doing to the fetus.

There is no way the school system can cope with these children. Right now, the rooms are filled with hyperactive children who keep the teacher from educating any of the children.

Each year, it is going to get worse. If you force the addicted drug user or the very poor woman to have babies, the taxpayer will pay for it and the standard of living of all of us will be lowered.

The pro-life advocates have no idea what they are causing. They have cut funding for family planning. The poor do not have enough prenatal and post-natal care. Many babies are dying and those who live do not have the ability to cope with our society.

They have cut the research so we don't have safe contraceptives.

They outlaw a pill that might save breast cancer patients. Pro-life says let them die.

It might save the lives of glaucoma patients. Pro-life people say let them go blind.

The pro-lifers say they are trying to save lives. They are not! They are causing chaos and destruction!

Gambling would benefit Idaho

Lottery has shown that Idahoans do like to gamble, and the state surplus reflects that it is profitable. We have parimutuel horse racing and lottery. Why not casino gambling?

I invite the opponents of casino gambling to check the parking lots in Jackpot and see the Idaho, Utah, Montana, Wyoming, Washington and Canadian autos. Cars with two to six people pass through Idaho.

I suggest a local option casino law with 25 percent going to schools for salaries and building programs, 20 percent for state and county roads, 20 percent to law enforcement, 10 percent to universities and colleges; 10 percent to cities and 15 percent to state parks and recreations. This writer remembers when we had casino gambling and the revenue paid for a greater part of our fire departments, streets and police departments.

Local option would allow those who wanted casino gambling to build hotels, attract conventions and create a new wave of tourism. Coeur d'Alene, Boise, Sun Valley, Twin Falls, Pocatello and Idaho Falls could intercept the tourists on their way through Idaho and maybe detain them for a day or two. Jobs of all descriptions would be created and the state coffers would benefit in taxes and growth.

Deadwood, S.D., population under 3,000, voted in casinos and $22 million was taken in the first two months of operation.

New Senate leadership needed

The 1990 Legislature is about to end the session. The session was dominated by one bill – the pro-choice bill. Regardless of one's position as pro-choice or pro-life, the 1990 session has provided a great example for any political science class.

All voters constantly hear the political term "leadership." "Leadership" in the Idaho State Senate is now a reality and not just a word.

Sen. Mike Crapo is now the Republican majority leader. He is from Idaho Falls. Sen. Mark Rick of Rexburg is the Republican chairman of the State Affairs Committee.

Certainly, the issue of pro-life and pro-choice had to be faced this session but for the leadership to adopt a bill drafted in Washington, D.C., which was designed to be presented as a constitutional measure, is inexcusable. The Utah legislation was presented with the same bill and refused to consider it.

Professor Wilkinson of BYU, a pro-life advocate, testified in Utah and Idaho that the national measure so fondly embraced in Idaho was legally inadequate.

In Maryland, the Legislature passed two bills – one pro-life, one pro-choice – and then put them on the ballot for the fall election. Idaho could have done the same thing, but the leadership refused.

The Idaho political scene is now guaranteed at least five years of being totally overwhelmed by pro-life, pro-choice. As House Bill 625 slogs its way to the United States Supreme Court, the storm will continue.

Idaho's economy is growing. Its roads and bridges are in decay. The Hawkins bankruptcy serves notice to agriculture that commodity marketing needs attention.

Our classrooms are overcrowded and the list goes on; but Sens. Crapo and Ricks have seen to it that each of those issues will have a great struggle even to be heard and discussed above the din of battle created by their national bill.

Idaho is in the center ring of a great national circus. One hopes that the two Republican leaders get enough kicks out of seeing their names in the national media to justify the mess they have created in Idaho.

The 1991 Idaho legislative session cannot open with the same Senate leadership. Idaho cannot ignore its daily problems and turn it self into a ghetto like the Bronx because of neglect.

Let the national pressure groups find other parsies. Idaho really does not have time for the same Senate leadership even one more session. There must be reaction in the election this fall or Idaho will sink below the surface with the Crapo-Ricks flag flying.

No need to take over Owyhee

The Air Force has proposed creating an immense bombing range which covers over 2,6 million acres of spectacular desert and majestic canyon lands to be used as an intensive battlefield and nearly 10,000 square miles of airspace for military operations.

The Saylor Creek Range Expansion Project is an area which contains the highest concentration of nesting birds of prey in North America. Much of this desert is also crucial habitat for bighorn sheep, sage grouse, mule deer and antelope and is rich in archaeological values with some artifacts dating back more than 12,000 years. These resources are headed for pending doom if this project is approved.

The Saylor Creek Range Expansion proposes the use of live bombs. Some of the bombs do no explode on impact but remain on the land, making the area extremely dangerous for hundreds of years. There will be no return of these public lands once the Air Force is through with their tactical games.

The proposed bombing range expansion also includes the negative impact of approximately 48 sonic booms per day. This is outrageous. Not only will this have a significant impact on the wildlife but it doesn't take much imagination to see how our quality of life will be disrupted by such supersonic noise. How does hearing a sonic boom every 12.5 minutes of a 10-hour day grab you?

The Air Force has repeatedly stated that they are "working with everyone to insure that all concerns are addressed to minimize public impact."

In reality, the public loses control of land withdrawn by the military. There are no open-process provisions for public input regarding management of Department of Defense lands. Promises and assurances of access and multiple use, even though well intentioned, can be cancelled later with no public review.

The Mountain Home supporters would have you believe that this expanded bombing range is needed for the "economic viability of Elmore County."

Flowery words for greed, pure and simple. The Mountain Home Air Force Base is being "beefed up" and renovated and will be a major part of the Air Force and Elmore County with or without this range expansion.

The Defense Secretary's Commission on Base Realignments and Closures Recommendation makes no mention of a need for further expansion of the Saylor Creek Range.

Please speak out against this pork barrel project that comes at a time of decreasing military tension. At such a time, it would only follow that there would be a decrease in military training needs – not a huge, gluttonous increase as the Air Force proposes.

I submit that there is no need for this massive military takeover of Owyhee County.

Consider the baby in abortion

When I read your pro-abortion editorials, it saddens me so deeply.

I encourage you to really investigate the pro-life issues; specifically to really take a look at the development of the human in the uterus from conception and note when the brain waves and nerves develop.

Watch the movie, "The Silent Scream." I believe so strongly that if you really open your eyes, you will realize that abortion is killing a life – murder. The baby is given no choice; abortion is strictly the mother's choice – one sided. Please take a look.

In my college years, I was pro-abortion. I now realize I never seriously considered the baby/fetus. The pro-abortion issues sound great if you don't consider the baby.

Print more newsworthy stories

I'm rather fascinated with The Times-News overwhelming support and loyalty to the Twin Falls County Public Defender.

The paper has made this public defender out to be almost a Byronic Hero, and I'm not sure why. Will there be front-page stories with color photos of other public defenders in the area?

The public defender is paid by tax dollars to represent people who do not have a job or any means of paying for legal counsel when charged with a crime. According to the Twin Falls District Court clerk, approximately 60 percent of the cases filed by the prosecuting attorney's office are handled by the public defender – not 80 percent. I would hate to think 80 percent of all crime in this county is committed by the unemployed and their legal counsel paid for by taxpayers!

The Times-News keeps the friction between this county's prosecutor and defender alive and in print. The Magic Valley has other prosecutors and defenders whose names your readers have never seen in print. Why?

As a taxpayer, I find the above-mentioned man to have a sour personality, to be extremely rude and to have little respect for women or children. I acknowledge the need for legal representation for people without the means to pay for it, and I also recognize the need to keep capable prosecutors to guarantee the victims of crime that same protection and representation.

Let the lawyers fight their own battles in the courthouse – print newsworthy, interesting stories.

Military didn't put us in Vietnam

Mr. Frazier is confused as to the role of military in this country. The military did not put us in Vietnam – or any other war or conflict for that matter. The President and the Congress of the United States is responsible for every war that we have ever fought. The civilian government declares war and the military is ordered to go to war by the President and Congress.

The Congress passed the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, and that is the document that required the military to go to war in Vietnam.

In the beginning, the American public did back the war, or they would have voted those people out of office who put us there in the first place.

The Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces is the President of the United States, and the military receives their orders from him. By the way, Mr. Frazier, he's a civilian.

Barbara Bush accepts a portion of 10,000 pounds of broccoli

Broccoli arrives but president stays away

WASHINGTON (AP) — There was broccoli, broccoli everywhere Monday at the White House — broccoli on the lawn, broccoli in the boutonnieres, broccoli in the bouquet in Barbara Bush's hand.

Everywhere, that is, except on President Bush's plate.

And that apparently is how it will stand given the president's adamancy against the vegetable his wife and mother forced him to eat for decades.

The broccoli lobby rode the wave of publicity right onto the White House lawn, where hundreds of reporters turned out to watch the broccoli-boosting first lady accept three boxes of the vegetable and a bouquet.

That was just the tip of a 10,000-pound avalanche of broccoli California growers shipped east to donate to soup kitchens and shelters in the nation's capital in a riposte to the president's predilections.

"We appreciate the fact that the president himself does not like broccoli personally," said George Dunlop, president of the United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Association.

But Dunlop, sporting a broccoli boutonniere, offered Mrs. Bush "some very good new recipes ... (that) just might intrigue the president to take the plunge into the wonderful world of fresh broccoli."

"I'm going to overlook the fact you think my cooking is not up to par," cracked Mrs. Bush. "But I'm going to tell you the honest truth: The president is never going to eat broccoli.

"But I am never going to eat pork rinds, ever," she promised.

In a vive-la-difference aside, she added, "That's why you stayed married 45 years."

The Bush children "have checked in with a little bit of criticism" for their father, she said, but "if his own blessed mother can't make him eat broccoli, then I give up."

"Millie and I thank you for the broccoli. We'll eat it," said Mrs. Bush, whose dog stretched beside the three cases of Irish Spring broccoli, bursting over a small table.

Mrs. Bush also said it was "marvelous" the needy in the nation's capital were getting tons of free broccoli.

Trying to evoke guilt in the media horde, she said, "You probably wouldn't have come if we'd come out to talk about the food bank."

The industry had said earlier it was bringing 10 tons of broccoli. At the event, they halved the estimate.

Bush set the wheels in motion for the protest when it became known that he had ordered stewards aboard Air Force One to stop serving him broccoli.

The president, in words a picky child could only envy, told a news conference last Thursday: "I do not like broccoli and I haven't liked it since I was a little kid and my mother made me eat it and I'm president of the United States and I'm not going to eat any more broccoli."

U.S. wants expanded UN force for Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department welcomed on Monday an agreement providing for the demobilization of the Nicaraguan Contras and called on the United Nations to take steps to ensure the process is carried out quickly and peacefully.

Under the agreement, reached Friday, rebel forces based in Honduras would be disarmed by April 20, while those in Nicaragua would be deployed in enclaves protected by international observers.

The agreement also calls for an internationally supervised cease fire in Nicaragua.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler called the agreement historic and congratulated the parties to it, including the rebel leadership, officials of the Nicaraguan Roman Catholic Church and representatives of President-elect Violeta Chamorro, who will take office April 25.

"We are pleased that the Sandinista government has agreed to cooperate fully in implementing the accord," Ms. Tutwiler added.

The agreement is to be guaranteed by the U.N. Observer Force for Central America (ONUCA) and a separate commission composed of U.N. and Organization of American States officials. The force and the commission were created under an agreement reached last summer by Central American presidents.

"We would encourage the parties to move forward as rapidly as possible," Ms. Tutwiler said. "Towards that end, we urge the United Nations to deploy an enlarged ONUCA force to Nicaragua as rapidly as possible."

Left unclear from the agreement was the time frame for demobilizing the Contras who are in Nicaragua. Published reports said Monday that the rebels intend to remain in the enclaves for months after Mrs. Chamorro's inauguration.

Ms. Tutwiler had no estimate of the number of Contras inside Nicaragua but President Daniel Ortega has said the total is 4,000 to 6,000. He has said that the Contras plan a big offensive shortly before Mrs. Chamorro's inauguration.

Senator introduces plan to boost 'LISA' funding

By MILLICENT LAWTON
States News Service

WASHINGTON — Sen. Patrick Leahy introduced legislation Monday that would boost funding more than tenfold for a federal-low-input "sustainable" agriculture program.

Leahy, the Vermont Democrat who chairs the Senate Agriculture Committee, is calling for $50 million in funding for the existing LISA program, a $45.5 million increase over this year's budget. The Bush administration's budget proposes maintaining $4.5 million for the program in 1991, according to Leahy's office.

LISA refers to alternative methods of farming that aim to reduce the use of fertilizer, pesticides and herbicides while maintaining or increasing farm profits and productivity.

Farmers nationwide want Washington to help them reduce chemical input use on their operations, Leahy said in a statement. "It's time we offered them some real help, not just idle words," he said.

The new funds would go toward:

- On-site research of crop rotation systems, biological control and other low-input farming methods.
- A state-federal matching grant program for the creation of state sustainable agriculture research, extension and education projects.
- Establishing training programs to give intensive classroom and field instruction for extension service specialists.

The bill would also bar use of U.S. Department of Agriculture money for research on herbicide-resistant plants. It reallocates those federal funds to research of other weed control methods that encourage reduced use of herbicides.

The legislation would also shift decision-making authority from USDA to national and regional groups that include farmers, environmental and non-profit groups and other government agencies.

No go on Pentagon renovation request

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of a Senate panel on military construction said Monday that a Bush administration request for $1.1 billion to renovate the Pentagon is "out of the question."

Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., acknowledged the 47-year-old building needs repair but said the administration's call for $1.1 billion over seven years would be difficult to heed in a time of shrinking budgets.

"The military construction bill is going to get smaller not larger," Sasser told Pentagon officials at a Senate hearing. "There's simply no room for such an undertaking."

In seconds, merry atmosphere turns into nightmare

NEW YORK (AP) — The music pulsed from reggae to salsa, and the dance floor was a riot of flashing lights and dancers. Their clothes were fine, their spirits high, and the $5 cover was a small price to pay for merriment.

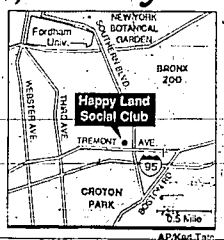

There was no fuckus downstairs. A bearded patron was harassing a former girlfriend who worked at the club, and a bouncer was called over.

"Don't push me, don't push me," the patron said.

And then: "I'll be back."

The time was about 3:15 a.m. Sunday. The man identified as Julio Gonzalv allegedly went to a nearby gas station and bought a gallon of gasoline.

Then, according to police, he made good on his promise. He carried the gasoline back to the Happy Land Social Club — the name referred to America, the new home of the mostly Latin immigrant clientele — and stood at the only exit.

He splashed the fuel on the floor and wall inside, and then lit it.

What happened next is conjecture. "Only a few survived the maelstrom.

The way fire investigators reconstruct it, what followed was a two-step holocaust. The ground floor was an inferno; the windowless second floor, where all but 18 of the 87 victims were found, was a gas chamber.

"You had a roaring fire on the first floor and the people had no way of getting out, except the staircase that led down into the roaring fire, so they succumbed to the smoke," said Fire Commissioner Carlos Rivera.

Some died instantly. Rescue workers told of finding victims with their drink glasses in their hands. Others fell while sitting at the bar, their legs still intertwined with the bar stools.

"Lungs are seared by hot gases, and it becomes impossible to take a second breath," said Dr. Alexander Kuehl, director of emergency medicine at New York Hospital. "And when there is not enough oxygen coming in to feed the fire, you get carbon monoxide, which can kill you in a minute."

"It was a huge rush of superheated poison gas. We call it a flashover, it is instant. If you are breathing in, it is deadly," said Zachary Goldfarb, Emergency Medical Service deputy chief of operations.

Some victims frantically tried to escape. Bodies were piled four deep by the upstairs door, testament to their desperation.

"You can't imagine what went on in there; you can't imagine what these people did to try to survive," said firefighter Dennis Devlin.

"Some looked like they were sleeping," said firefighter Richard Harden.

"Some looked horrified. Some looked like they were in shock. There were some people holding hands. There were some people who looked like they were trying to commiserate and hug each other. Some people had torn their clothes off in their panic to get out."

There was no sprinkler system on the ground floor. The sprinklers on the second floor discharged after 87 people were dead, authorities said. Firefighters arrived in a few minutes, but there were no screams, no cries.

Tents torn down in school conflict

SELMA, Ala. (AP) — Deputies removed two tents from the City Hall lawn Monday, after a judge temporarily limited a protest over the impending dismissal of Selma's first black school superintendent.

"It went rather peaceful," Dallas County Sheriff W.D. "Cotton" Nichols said after the tents, pitched by demonstrators on Saturday, were removed at about 6 a.m.

City police later arrested a man who allegedly tried to take a video camera from a police officer who was recording the dismantling of the tents. One of the demonstrators, Ronald Peoples, 28, was charged with theft and disorderly conduct, said police Chief M.E. Summerlin.

The protesters are seeking a three-year contract extension for Superintendant Norward Rousseli, whose $80,000-a-year contract expires in June.

Lawmaker seeks laws for clinics

WASHINGTON (AP) — Overweight people need better government protection from weight-loss clinics that advertise thinness but deliver health problems, a congressman investigating diet programs said Monday.

"This subcommittee has found the medical field riddled with hucksters who ply their dubious wares and their miracle cures while government regulators sit snoozing on the sidelines," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., chairman of the House Small Business subcommitee on regulation.

Wyden said he was glad to see the Federal Trade Commission going after the most outrageous of the get-thin schemes, such as diet pills said to work during sleep, mail order starvation-binge plans or ear molds that allegedly use an acupuncture-type technique to reduce appetite.

But he said a potentially greater threat is the trend toward commercial weight-loss clinics and physician-supervised diet programs. He said the FTC is doing nothing about them.

He also criticized the agency for inaction against "the new tin men of television — the 'infomercial,'" lengthy product promotions often appearing to be documentaries or interview shows.

"The American people falsely believe they are well protected both by government and the ethic of commerce," said Wyden.

He said that, under then-President Reagan, the FTC was particularly lax about pursuing fraud in diet advertising, leading to the problem he said exists today.

"In the name of promoting competition in health care," the commission "fostered an environment that left us a buyer-beware medical marketplace in which the scam artists could claim virtually anything with impunity — and did," said Wyden.

Janet Steiger, named to head the FTC by President Bush, said the commission has been acting against phony weight plans since 1926, concentrating on the most egregious.

"Now we're taking a closer look at the weight loss clinics," she said.

She advocated consumer education and said an agency task force is trying to find ways the federal government can coordinate its efforts with state governments.

"We are encouraging state criminal enforcement where it is appropriate," she said, listing several court actions taken against abusers in the 1980s.

Also testifying before Wyden's subcommittee were women who said diet clinics caused them or their family members medical problems.

Jet engine fire causes pilot to abort takeoff

BOSTON (AP) — Flames were spotted Monday in an engine of a TWA jetliner carrying 176 people, forcing the pilot to abort takeoff.

Seven passengers sustained minor injuries while sliding down evacuation chutes, officials said.

The Logan International control tower alerted the crew of Flight 31, less than a minute into the 9:30 a.m. takeoff for St. Louis and Los Angeles, said Thomas J. Kinton, deputy director of aviation with the Massachusetts Port Authority.

The L-1011 jetliner taxied off the runway and chutes were deployed to help the 163 passengers get off the plane, said Phil Orlandella, an agency spokesman.

The injured were taken to Massachusetts General Hospital for treatment of floor burns and twisted ankles.

He said ground crews found no smoke or fire when they inspected the engine.

Supreme Court will rule on hazardous jobs ban for women

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said Monday it will study the power of employers to exclude females of child-bearing age from hazardous jobs, a case that could affect millions of working women.

The court agreed to review a ruling that let a Milwaukee-based manufacturer of automobile batteries ban women who cannot prove they are infertile from jobs that expose them to lead.

The fetal protection policy is being challenged as a form of illegal sex discrimination because it bans women from high-paying, if hazardous, jobs.

Exposure to lead, the principal material used in making batteries, can be a health risk to workers and to the fetuses of pregnant workers.

But one judge, who dissented from an appeals court decision last year that upheld the fetal protection policy, said the ruling also could be applied to a broad range of employment, including "traditional office jobs."

The high court's decision is expected sometime in 1991.

In other action, the court:

• Agreed to decide in an Oklahoma City case whether some school districts may abandon forced busing after achieving racial balance.

• Voted to study an appeal from Nebraska challenging the authority of states to house convicted murderers on "death rows" and keep them apart from other inmates.

• Said it will consider giving federal regulators more authority to lower electricity rates, setting the stage for a ruling that could affect more than 49 million homes.

• Refused to extend a key civil rights law to protect non-citizens from private, as well as governmental, bias. The justices let stand a ruling that a New Orleans bank did not discriminate illegally against a man when it denied him a credit card because he is not a citizen.

• Let stand the conviction of an Indiana business for showing and selling movies "harmful to minors," rejecting arguments that the conviction and $5,000 fine infringe free-speech rights.

In the fetal protection case, the court must interpret a federal law that bans sexual bias in employment.

Since 1982 the battery division of Johnson Controls Inc. has barred women at its factories in several states from jobs involving exposure to lead.

Eight employees and the United Auto Workers union challenged the policy in court. Among the women who sued was one who had submitted to sterilization to preserve her job and another who was a 50-year-old divorcee.

The suit alleged that the policy violated a part of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, called Title VII.

A federal judge ruled for Johnson Controls based on both sides' pretrial arguments. No trial was held.

The 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld that ruling by a 7-4 vote last Sept. 26.

Judge John L. Coffey wrote for the appeals court that the differing treatment of female employees was based on a "business necessity," and added, "We are also convinced that Johnson Controls' fetal protection policy would be upheld under the bona fide occupational qualification defense."

The appeals court concluded that the policy "is reasonably necessary to industrial safety."

Three of the appeals court's four dissenting judges wrote opinions, the most scathing by Judge Frank Easterbrook, an appointee of President Ronald Reagan.

Calling it "likely the most important sex-discrimination case in any court since ... Congress enacted Title VII," Easterbrook said, "If the majority is right, then by one estimate 20 million industrial jobs would be closed to women, for many substances in addition to lead pose fetal risks.

"The law would allow employers to consign more women to 'women's work' while reserving better-paying but more hazardous jobs for men," Easterbrook said.

"Cases ... show that many additional women are affected by restrictions placed on other jobs, such as the X-ray technician jobs that exposed embryos to radiation. Concern about emissions from computers and their terminals has led to proposals that could restrict access even to traditional office jobs," he said.

A California appeals court recently ruled that Johnson Controls fetal protection policy is illegal sex discrimination under that state's law.

Court urged to wait on flag case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court was urged Monday to wait until its next term before reviewing a new federal law banning desecration of the American flag.

Protesters who burned flags here and in Seattle said the court should reject a Bush administration request that two cases be decided in the current court term due to end by early July. The new term begins in October.

The administration is appealing two rulings that said the law violates freedom of speech and is unconstitutional under a high court ruling last year that struck down a Texas law against flag desecration.

Lawyers for the protesters said it might be appropriate for the justices to uphold the lower court rulings summarily without hearing orgal arguments. The attorneys said they don't oppose full-scale review of the law by the court because the issue is so important.

Scheduling oral arguments next month, as the administration requests, would not allow the challengers enough time to prepare their case, the lawyers said.

Court to rule on abandoning busing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said Monday it will decide whether school districts may abandon forced busing of students after once achieving racial balance in their schools.

The justices will review a ruling that, if upheld, could reinstate forced busing for the racial desegregation of elementary schools in Oklahoma City.

At issue is the effect of a federal judge's ruling in 1977 that the city's public schools had become fully integrated and no longer had to be under court supervision.

The city in 1985 returned to a neighborhood schools plan for children in kindergarten through fourth grade, ending the racial balance achieved by crosstown busing of elementary school pupils.

By 1986, 33 of the school district's 64 elementary schools were 90 percent black or white, and some parents called the neighborhood schools plan a tool of "resegregation."

Hundreds of school districts, including those in most major cities, operate court-ordered busing plans for racial desegregation. Only a few have persuaded courts to declare their once-segregated systems fully integrated.

Nevertheless, the potential impact of the high court's decision, expected sometime in 1991, is enormous.

The issue gained national attention when the Reagan administration helped bring about a halt to court-ordered busing of elementary school pupils in Norfolk, Va.

The Norfolk school district was allowed to return to a neighborhood schools plan in 1986.

William Bradford Reynolds, head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division when it entered the Norfolk case in 1984, said the same legal principles could apply to "many, many other school districts around the country."

In the Oklahoma City case, a federal appeals court last Oct. 6 disapproved the neighborhood schools plan.

Oklahoma City public schools once were racially segregated by law. Black parents sued in 1961 to end the lasting effects of such segregation, and in 1972 forced busing was begun as part of a court-ordered desegregation plan.

U.S. District Judge Luther Bohanon ruled in 1977 that the school district had become fully integrated, and ended court supervision.

School officials continued the crosstown busing, however, until 1985 when children in kindergarten through fourth grade were allowed to attend the school nearest their home.

Jozsef Antall, head of the Hungarian Democratic Forum early leading at the polls, listens to journalists' questions

Western-style election plagued by slow count

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Hungarians applied the West's rules of fair play to their first free election in 43 years, but not its efficient division of results.

Only 60 percent of the votes cast in Sunday's election were counted by late Monday.

The state news agency MTI said the conservative Hungarian Democratic Forum led with about one-quarter of the votes, the center-left League of Free Democrats had roughly 20 percent and the Socialists, the new name adopted by the Communists, were a distant fourth after the Independent Smallholders Party.

With no party given a chance of forming a majority in Parliament, a coalition government is likely after runoff elections next month.

Hungarians like to consider themselves closer to the modern West than to the East, which they derisively call "The Balkans" or "Asia," but the election provides little evidence of Western-style technical efficiency.

International monitors expressed satisfaction with the vote's fairness, but the reporting of results has been an agonizing process.

East Germany held the first free election among former Soviet satellites on March 18, and provided projections of the outcome soon after polls closed. Provisional final results were available five hours after the last vote was cast and official results were announced the next morning.

The East Germans had West German computers and knew how to use them. The Hungarians had modern computers, but appeared incapable of using them.

Gleaming banks of computer terminals were on prominent display at election committee headquarters in the parliament building and in state television's election studio.

Shortly after the polls closed, the television began a scheduled 24-hour broadcast, complete with an inspiring musical theme and elaborate graphics.

The computer screens remained blank. Election officials decided at the last minute, not explaining why, to tally the more than 5 million ballots by hand and use computers only for a final check.

That also crippled state television's computer system, which depended partially on feeds from the election committee network. Commentators mumbled excuses and read handwritten partial results.

Some attempts to draw on the computers were embarrassing. Commentators presented an analysis of early partial results from a rural election district, only to find that it was a text graphic with imaginary candidates and percentages.

Members of a television panel trying to explain inconclusive and sometimes misleading data gave up before dawn Monday.

"What do you expect? This is Hungary," philosopy professor Mihaly Vajda said to the other panelists. "I would suggest we try to analyze what we have. We could only be wrong. For all we know, we may be the only people up."

Panel member Peter Kende, a Hungarian who teaches political science at the Sorbonne in Paris, said: "It's a little hard to believe that we've been sitting around for seven hours and we still don't know anything."

Fighting flares up again in Beirut Christian sector

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Gunbattles flared in Beirut's Christian sector Monday after night-long artillery and tank fire duels in the hinterland northeast of the capital. Police said four people were killed and 14 wounded.

That raised the overall toll to 772 killed and 2,143 wounded since Jan. 30, when army Gen. Michel Aoun moved to crush Christian warlord Samir Geagea's Lebanese Forces militia.

It was the third straight day of violations of a March 3 cease-fire, heightening fears of a new round of all-scale fighting to resolve the inconclusive power struggle for control of Lebanon's Christian enclave.

Police reported Aoun's troops and Geagea's militiamen were engaged in battles on the streets of east Beirut's residential district of Sin el-Fil, the industrial Dora neighborhood and a cluster of abandoned government compounds in Badaro.

"They are shooting at each other with machine guns and rocket-propelled grenades, but neither side seems trying to push for territorial gains thus far," said a police spokesman at midday. He cannot be named under standing rules.

Both sides also traded sniper fire across the coastal highway tunnel on the Dog River boundary between Aoun's positions in the Metn province and Geagea's lines in Kesrouan region, the spokesman said.

Ten of the wounded were hit by sniper fire on the Dog River crossing.

He said Lebanon's main power-generating plant in militia-controlled Zouk just north of the river took several direct hits in the nighttime shelling.

Panama, Mexico feud over Noriega ally

The Washington Post

PANAMA CITY, Panama — A diplomatic row is brewing between Panama and Mexico over the refusal of the Mexican Embassy here to hand over a top civilian ally of deposed Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega on charges he was involved in the embezzlement of millions of dollars while serving as manager of Panama's National Bank.

The case of Rafael Arosemena Alvarado, a former senior executive of Citibank here, is one of several that have pitted the new government of President Guillermo Endara against some of its Latin American neighbors. It also illustrates what government auditors and investigators say is the rampant corruption that mushroomed under the Noriega regime, creating a public finance mess that continues to bog down the new administration's economic recovery efforts.

Several embassies, including those of Peru, Ecuador, Venezuela and the Vatican, opened their doors to Noriega associates, and many were permitted safe passage out of Panama. The few Noriega associates who remain under foreign diplomatic protection, however, are causing problems.

At the papal nunciature, where Noriega took refuge before surrendering to U.S. forces Jan. 4, his former security chief, Capt. Asuncion Eliezer Gaitan, remains ensconsed. The papal nuncio refuses to hand him over to face murder charges, and the government is unwilling to permit him safe passage. A similar situation prevails at the Peruvian Embassy, where former majors Heraclides Sucre and Gonzalo Gonzalez are hiding out from authorities who want to prosecute them on charges of murdering coup plotters after a failed military putsch against Noriega last October.

The government last week gave Cuba's ambassador five days to leave the country in a dispute over Havana's refusal to recognize the Endara government or to turn over a former pro-Noriega legislator, Luis Gomez, who is charged with directing squads that killed two opposition demonstrators in 1987. The ambassador, Lazaro Mora, told reporters he planned to leave Monday.

The Mexican Embassy's decision to grant asylum to Arosemena clearly has become an irritant.

Panamanian authorities point out that Arosemena sought asylum Feb. 28, nearly two months after legal proceedings against him began and two weeks after a public prosecutor had issued the latest of two warrants for his arrest on charges of malfeasance and corruption. While he was general manager of the National Bank of Panama, the government charges, Arosemena allowed senior officers of the Panama Defense Forces to withdraw, on Noriega's orders, at least $12.2 million last year from the bank's reserves through checks made out to "bearer."

The money was part of $41.4 million that senior officers withdrew from the bank in 1989 through a series of checks without sufficient funds in PDF accounts to cover them, according to documents assembled by government auditors. Government officials say Arosemena not only facilitated the looting of the Panamanian treasury, but gave his wife and son lucrative sweetheart contracts to provide services to the National Bank.

Moslems prepare for holy month of Ramadan

JIDDAH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Moslems across the world scanned the skies after twilight Monday in hopes of sighting the luminous crescent moon that heralds the festive but arduous dawn-to-dusk fasting month of Ramadan.

First to announce the sighting from the Arabian Peninsula was North Yemen, where a panel of Islamic judges declared Ramadan will start Tuesday. Sightings also were reported in South Yemen and Saudi Arabia, who declared Tuesday the start of the Moslem holy month.

Many of the world's Islamic nations automatically follow the Saudi decision because the kingdom harbors Islam's holiest shrines.

Ramadan is venerated by the world's estimated 1 billion Moslems as the month during which the archangel Gabriel imparted the verses of the Koran to Mohammed, the prophet of Islam, more than 14 centuries ago. It is the 9th month in the Moslem lunar calendar.

For the 30 days of Ramadan, Moslems must abstain from eating, drinking, and smoking from dawn to sunset. They are to avoid pleasures of the flesh. Even an innocent kiss can be a violation. The more devout will even avoid swallowing their own saliva.

Only Moslems who are traveling, ill, or pregnant during Ramadan are exempt from the fast, according to the Koran. But they must make up for this in subsequent months.

Ex-Labor ministry official sentenced in bribery case

TOKYO (AP) — A former Labor Ministry official accused of receiving bribes from a company at the center of a major political bribery scandal was sentenced to one year in prison Monday, an official at the Tokyo District Court said.

Shigeru Kano, 56, former head of the ministry's Job Security Division, was also fined $8,700. Judge Akinori Matsumoto suspended the prison term for three years.

"He maintained a corrupt relationship with Recruit Co. without reservations, and should be held responsible for being repeatedly entertained from the company," Matsumoto said.

The sentencing was the first in a series of trials in the widespread influence-peddling affair known as the Recruit scandal, which rocked Japanese politics for more than a year.

The scandal centers around the information and publishing conglomerate Recruit Co., which tried to buy influence by spreading cash and bargain-priced shares in a subsidiary to hundreds of politicians, bureaucrats and business leaders.

The affair led to the indictment of 12 politicians, public officials and corporate executives for bribery.

Police fire tear gas at fleeing protesters Monday to disperse people who stoned a police station

Police shoot at protesters; 2 killed

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police on Monday clashed with demonstrators protesting living and working conditions in two black townships, and two blacks were killed, witnesses said.

Also Monday, officials blamed guerrillas of the African National Congress for attacks the night before on town offices in Soweto and a power station in Johannesburg. The attacks came less than three weeks before the anti-apartheid ANC is scheduled to begin negotiations with the white-minority government.

Police said they used birdshot, rubber bullets and tear gas to disperse several thousand demonstrators in Sharpeville and Sebokeng. The townships are just south of Johannesburg, about six miles apart.

In Sebokeng, the protesters stoned a police station and set fire to the municipal buildings, police said.

"Police (are) coming on constant attack, mainly by stone-throwing mobs," said a statement from police headquarters in Pretoria.

At least two blacks were killed and hundreds wounded during the clash in Sebokeng, according to a nurse at the Sebokeng Hospital who declined to give her name.

Other witnesses gave similar accounts, and some said more than 300 were injured, but it was not immediately clear how the two blacks were killed.

Police said there was an undetermined number of injuries, but they had no information on deaths.

No casualties were reported in Sharpeville.

The demonstrators were protesting rents, housing conditions and working conditions in the townships, witnesses said.

Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok met with local police officials and promised to increase staffing and patrols in the troubled region.

Also, police accused African National Congress guerrillas of firing two rocket-propelled grenades Sunday night at town council offices in Soweto, another township outside Johannesburg.

Honecker won't face treason charges

EAST BERLIN (AP) — Prosecutors said Monday there were no legal grounds for charging Erich Honecker with high treason, but the deposed Communist leader still was under investigation for corruption and abuse of power.

Efforts to form a new governing coalition continued to be disrupted Monday by allegations that leading politicians had links to the former Communist secret police.

The office of chief prosecutor Hans-Juergen Joseph said two members of Honecker's Politburo state security chief Erich Mielke and Guenther Mittag, the economics minister — also would escape treason charges but, like Honecker, were suspected of corruption and misusing their power.

Treason proceedings were dropped against Joachim Herrmann, Honecker's propaganda chief. The former Politburo member was ordered released.

Honecker, 77, was arrested in January after undergoing surgery for kidney cancer, but was freed the next day, and Mielke also has been released for health reasons. Mittag remains in custody.

Prosecutors had said earlier that Honecker, Mielke and Mittag would be indicted and put on trial this month for high treason, which carries a maximum sentence of life in prison.

Joseph said in a statement Monday, however, that treason indictments were not warranted and the three men also had been cleared of conspiracy charges.

His statement, carried by the state-run news agency ADN, accused Honecker and his lieutenants of "persistent breaches of the constitution." It added, however, that the actions were part of a one-party Stalinist system and suggested treason charges against individuals would not be appropriate.

Honecker and Mittag, 64, are accused of embezzling state funds to build vacation homes and provide other personal comforts. A range of accusations against Mielke, 84, stem from his control of the formerly all-powerful state security apparatus.

Indictments are not expected before May or June, Joseph told The Associated Press. His spokeswoman, Ilke Jurkutat, said trials probably would not begin before summer because poor health was slowing interrogation of all three men.

Barco drug war position under fire

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — President Virgilio Barco came under attack Monday after his top Cabinet minister resigned and suggested the government's resolve has weakened against drug traffickers.

Interior Minister Carlos Lemos Simmonds stepped down Sunday night. His replacement, former Attorney General Horacio Serpa, said the government's position against drug traffickers has not changed since Barco launched his crackdown against them Aug. 18.

However, Lemos, who was in charge of internal security and led the fight against traffickers, disagreed. He said he tried to block special deals sought by the traffickers but that the Liberal Party government was less firm in its resolve to fight the cartels.

On Monday, the presidential candidate of the opposition party accused the government of being ambiguous and insincere in its stated effort to fight the traffickers.

PET OF THE WEEK

Spring is a good time to start life with a new pet. This pair is typical of the several small house dogs now available at the humane society animal shelter. The female Cockapoo is a year-old and the Beagle-Dachsund male cross is about three years old. Both are friendly, gentle and well behaved. They are friendly, gentle and well behaved. They are anxious for permanent homes, and would be ideal family pets and companions.

The shelter, 139 6th Ave., W., is open 1 to 6 p.m. week days, 10:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturdays. Spring is also spay and neuter time for all pets.

Mother seeks residence to be with daughter

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP) — A mother who went to jail for two years rather than reveal her daughter's whereabouts during a custody battle wants to stay in New Zealand to live with the girl, it was reported Monday.

The TV3 television network quoted Dr. Elizabeth Morgan's current husband, Paul Michel, as saying his wife hopes to resume her career as a plastic surgeon in New Zealand and live with 7-year-old Hilary Foretich.

Ms. Morgan flew last month from Washington to New Zealand, where Hilary had been secretly living with her maternal grandparents, after investigators for Ms. Morgan's ex-husband found her.

Ms. Morgan was jailed for 25 months until last fall for refusing to say where Hilary was living. She alleged the girl's father, her ex-husband Erich Foretich, sexually abused the child.

Foretich, of Falls Church, Va., denies abusing Hilary. He said in an interview from his home Monday that he expected his wife to take up residence in New Zealand.

"I have known that for several days, and had predicted that would be her course of action long before that," he said.

Michel said he was prevented from applying for permanent residency because he is a federal judge and must live in Washington.

"I expect that my wife will stay here. So I hope to be a frequent visitor to your lovely city," Morgan told TV3.

Hilary's maternal grandparents spirited the child to Britain and then to Christchurch, New Zealand, where Foretich's investigators found her last month. She had been attending a private school.

Foretich was accused by his former wife of hunting his daughter "like an animal" when he arrived in New Zealand last month to see the girl.

Original Eiffel Tower staircase goes to auction

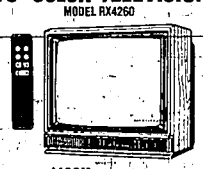

PARIS (AP) — A piece of French history goes up for bid April 4 with the auction of the last three available sections of the Eiffel Tower's original spiral staircase.

The sale is to take place in Toyko at the Hotel Okura and will be transmitted by satellite to bidders at the Eiffel Tower.

The staircase, which linked the second and third stories of the famed symbol of Paris, was inaugurated March 31, 1889, when Gustave Eiffel climbed to the top and unfurled the French tricolor emblazoned with the gold initials "R.F." for the French Republic.

Yesterday's Puzzle Solved:

SYDNEY OMARR

ASTROLOGICAL FORECASTS

IF MARCH 27 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You are a survivor and these past weeks proved it. During April you'll have responsibility, there will be pressure, deadline, relationship will be tested, obstacles you overcame earlier in March will be recognized. You are due for a reward and you'll get it despite some persons who are envious, suspicious.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Events, circumstances take sudden turn in your favor. Focus on writing, finding further outlets for creative expression. Meaningful dialogue will involve Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Family member says, "You have earned it and I'll go 'along with it'". No longer will it be necessary to play "hide-and-seek." Aries and another Taurus volunteer vital information. Act on it!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Promise will be fulfilled despite delay. Get second wind. Define terms, get rid of superfluous material. You could be dealing with "mysterious stranger." Romance lurks in background. Pisces involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis on deadline, testing, ability to fulfill obligation. You'll be given more authority plus responsibility. Relationship intensifies. Key person says "You've got the job!" Accept.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Win rather than force your way. You get almost everything you want through diplomacy, display of affection. Chance exists to direct your own destiny. Scenario features distance, language.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Emphasize independence, originality, willingness to "break the code." Leo, Aquarius persons help you establish identity. Credit rating is at risk unless you clarify intentions. Financial shake-up is due.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Rise above petty differences. Gain overall view. Spotlight continues on cooperative efforts, possible partnership, rights and permissions. Questions concerning marriage will be answered. Aquarian involved.

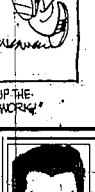

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You'll encounter individual who helps you break down barriers. Limitations will be removed. You'll deal with people from foreign lands. Scenario features employment, basic issues, health improvement.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Study. Scorpio message. You'll learn secret, motives will be discerned, you'll be free of doubts and fears. Express ideas in frank manner. Member of opposite sex helps boost morale. Renovate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Changes occur on home front. Review written material. What begins as mild flirtation could lead to "something serious." Observe rules of safety.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What seemed far away is suddenly upon you. Major domestic adjustment can no longer be avoided. Be diplomatic but refuse to abandon principles. Threat of money loss is removed. Taurus represented.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You learn truth as result of psychic impressions. Emphasis on mystery, intrigue, view from backstage. Financial picture will be defined. Key will unlock additional door. Another Pisces is involved.

What's what

The pigs find pot

West German police use trained pigs to sniff out illegal substances. Marijuana, mostly. It's no trick to teach the pigs. They've long been in the truffle hunt. But I understand it takes a lawman with special cool to manage a pot search. Report is the marijuana smoker, usually a fairly docile sort, tends to get smart aleeky at the sight of a cop with a pig on a leash.

One sort of telephone receiver in Great Britain is called a "Trimphone." Its electronic ring trills most distinctively. Certain birds called song thrushes, thereabouts have modified their own tunes to sound just like those phones. When the birds sing, everybody answers their phones.

Q. What's the difference between an emerald and an aquamarine?

A. Only the color. Both are beryl. A trace of chromium makes it an emerald — green. A trace of iron makes it an aquamarine — blue-green.

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: I've read your column for years, but I've never seen this problem addressed before: Last week, I went to the beauty shop to get my hair cut. I am a very conservative person and don't like unusual haircuts, so I gave my beautician (he calls himself a "stylist") a few instructions on how I wanted him to cut it. Well, he didn't seem too pleased with me and my instructions; then he turned my chair so that my back was to the mirror, and I couldn't see what he was doing.

After he finished and I saw what he had done, I nearly cried. My hair was so short, I looked like a man!

This is not the first time I have been "sheared" by a beautician. After talking to my friends, I learned that every one of them has had a similar experience.

Abby, why do beauticians do this? And has anyone ever sued a barber for a lousy haircut?

— SHEARED

DEAR SHEARED: Some beauticians get scissors-happy for a variety of reasons; first they cut off a little too much, then they try to "even it up." Others get carried away, or want to give the customer his/her money's worth.

I doubt if anyone has ever sued a barber for a lousy haircut. By the time the case would get on the court calendar, the plaintiff's hair would have grown long enough to sit on.

DEAR ABBY: My wife insists on total privacy when she gabs on the telephone. None of her conversations are less than 45 minutes, and a two-hour gabfest is all too common.

If I want to talk to her, I must wait until she hangs up the phone. This waiting has irritated me for all 27 years of our marriage.

Am I selfish to think my wife should put her telephone gabbers on hold while I steal a minute of her time to tell her something before I forget it altogether? Or is she rude and inconsiderate (or ignoring my need to talk to her? I signal for her to please hang up, but she just turns her back on me.

I know she reads your column. Which one of us needs straightening out the most, Abby? Please help. I'm signing my name, but if you print this, call me ... FRUSTRATED HUSBAND

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Your wife is indeed rude and inconsiderate, but if you've been putting up with it for 27 years, you have my profound sympathy. Next time, try slipping your wife a note while she's talking. Also make a note to yourself to remind you of what you wanted to talk to her about.

DEAR ABBY: In response to letters about discrimination and humiliation suffered by exceptionally tall people, I was reminded of a 6-foot, 7-inch acquaintance of mine. He got so tired of people he hardly knew asking him if he played basketball, he got a shirt on which is printed, "No. Do you play miniature golf?"

— J.K. IN LAKELAND, FLA.

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS and getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Delaying kindergarten for some becoming standard

Q. Most of the psychologists and pediatricians in our community are advising parents of children who turn 6 after June 1 to delay by one year their enrollment in kindergarten. They say this insures a successful kindergarten experience for children who, by virtue of late birthdays, are immature. As the parents of a child who will be 5 in August, we would like to know your thoughts on this matter.

A. In the last 10 years or so, the recommendation to delay kindergarten entrance for so-called "late-birthday" children has become fairly standard within the professional community.

The original feelings was that such a delay was more important for late-birthday boys (at this age, boys tend to lag slightly behind girls in fine-motor skills, eye-hand coordination and language development). Over time, however, the recommendation has expanded to include girls with late-birthdays, also known as "summer children."

The popularity of this recommendation has grown in the last two decades as kindergartens have become increasingly academic. The "push-down" curriculum, as it is called, places increasing numbers of children at risk for early failure experiences. Waiting to introduce academic skills until children are six reduces that risk considerably.

For this reason, when the kindergarten program stresses academic skills over developmental readiness, I am in favor of delayed enrollment. If, on the other hand, the program is developmental in emphasis, then I see little point in delaying kindergarten entrance for the late-birthday child unless significant developmental delays are part of the picture.

Enrolling the slightly immature child in kindergarten when the law allows is a "nothing ventured, nothing gained" proposition. A considerable amount of developmental growth takes place during the year. Consequently, a child who begins the school year slightly behind developmentally stands a good chance of catching up by the end of the year. If that progress doesn't occur, then a second year in kindergarten may be appropriate — even for some early-birthday kids.

Although there is controversy in educational and psychological circles concerning kindergarten retention, my experience has been that this can be extremely beneficial and isn't likely, as many researchers claim, to put the child's self-esteem at risk.

Many parents who choose delayed enrollment are motivated by a desire to see their child "go to the head of the class." That can backfire, particularly for a child who was ready to start school at age five. The following year, he may be bored in kindergarten.

Furthermore, if delayed enrollment for "summer children" becomes the norm, then all we end up doing is creating a new group of late-birthday kids — those with birthdays after March 1 who, relative to their kindergarten classmates are "immature." If we carry this to its absurd extreme, then in another ten years or so children might not be entering kindergarten until age seven.

The most practical solution, or so it seems to me, is to first, stop pushing parts of the traditional first grade curriculum down into kindergarten; second, enroll all but significantly developmentally delayed children in kindergarten when the law says they can be enrolled; third, have children repeat kindergarten when appropriate.

I should note that many schools are now offering transitional K-1 programs for children who need an additional readiness year before first grade. A tip of the hat to those innovative systems.

Jolson fans would walk a million miles for some items

Q. Are there collectors of Al Jolson memorabilia I can contact? I have some old Jolson records and sheet music I'd like to sell.

A. Otis R. Lowe is the director of the International Al Jolson Society Inc., 2981 Westmoor Dr., Columbus, Ohio 43204 (phone 614-274-1507); he can put you in touch with other Jolson collectors. There are still millions of people who remember Jolson, the first recording artist to sell a million copies of a record, "Sonny Boy" in 1928. Jolson gave his all to entertaining American GIs and died of a heart attack after visiting Korea in 1950. For Jolson-related information or membership details, write to Lowe at the society, which maintains an Al Jolson Archives Museum.

Q. Where can my aunt have an old country schoolhouse desk restored and a 1930s sofa reupholstered in a fabric like its original?

A. Superior Repair and Restoration Service repairs, restores, reupholsters, refinishes and reproduces missing parts for antique and vintage residential and commercial furniture and furnishings, including office chairs and every kind of old desk. The firm, which also makes service calls to restore old interior architectural millwork, is at 3107 N. Rockwell St., Chicago, Ill. 60618 (phone 312-539-3232). Superior also does out-of-town work and buys and restores old telephone booths, benches, stools, etc.

Peavey investigation results expected today

BOISE – A Senate investigation of alleged mail tampering involving Sen. John Peavey, D-Carey, is completed but Senate President Pro Tem Michael Crapo has delayed release of the findings.

Crapo, R-Idaho Falls, said Monday afternoon that an investigatory committee's report would most likely become public today. Neither Peavey nor Sen. Larrey Anderson, R-Eden, was talking about the informal investigation, which was sparked by Anderson's charges that Peavey had taken letters addressed to Anderson's Magic Valley constituents into his office.

Senate business came to a halt Monday afternoon while both Republican and Democratic leaders discussed the committee's report.

Peavey does not deny taking the mail. During an interview last week, he said that he merely counted the envelopes after being alerted by another Senate Democrat that Anderson might have exceeded the number of letters allowed through the Statehouse mailing system.

Wood River businessman declares House candidacy

KETCHUM – Wood River businessman Clint Stennett has declared a Democratic candidacy against Rep. Tom Morrison, R-Gooding.

Stennett, former publisher of the Wood River Journal and currently president of a television station, calls himself a "conservative, business-oriented person" who "can't go along with some of the archaic thinking of our legislature."

Stennett, 33, also opposes expanding the Saylor Creek Bombing Range as the Air Force has proposed. Morrison currently holds the District 22 Seat A in the Idaho House.

Judge sentences Heyburn man for kidnapping boy

RUPERT – A Heyburn man has been sentenced to at least 15 years and up to life imprisonment for kidnapping a 5-year-old Heyburn boy in October.

Howard Lee Estes pleaded guilty to kidnapping the boy, in exchange for prosecutors dropping an additional charge of lewd conduct. Fifth District Judge J. William Hart sentenced Estes.

Buhl barber will announce candidacy for House seat

BUHL – Sally Miller Gulick of Buhl says she will announce her candidacy for state representative today at her barber shop.

Gulick, 53, has been a barber for 24 years and owns "Sally's Barber Shop" in Buhl. She also operates a 50-acre farm and raises Holstein cattle.

Gulick, a Democrat, will face District 23 Rep. Celia Gould, R-Buhl, who is seeking her third term.

Gulick said she favors mandatory sentencing for crimes against children, tougher sentencing and enforcement for drug crimes and the elimination of plea bargaining for violent crimes.

"It's time Idaho gets tough on crime and sends a clear message that crime and violence will not be tolerated in our state," she said.

Gulick said she would vote to repeal the $6,000 per year legislative pay increase and fight for Twin Falls County's fair share of funds for roads and bridges.

House turns back attempts to repeal call for convention

BOISE – Members of the Idaho House turned back two attempts in the past week to bring a resolution repealing Idaho's call for a constitutional convention out of the House Ways and Means Committee for a full floor vote.

At the urging of Republican Congressman Larry Craig, who was then a state senator, the Idaho Legislature issued a call in 1979 for a constitutional convention in order to write a balanced budget amendment.

Idaho is among 32 states to issue a call for a constitutional convention to force a balanced federal budget. With only 34 states needed to issue a call, the Idaho Senate had second thoughts this January and passed a resolution to rescind Idaho's call.

The measure has been stalled since then in the House Ways and Means Committee.

Of Friday, every member of the Magic Valley delegation except Rep. Ron Black, R-Twin Falls, and Rep. Ralph Peters, R-Jerome, voted to allow the resolution to stay in the committee – where it will die when the Legislature adjourns. On Monday, Peters joined the majority opposing the move to pull the constitutional convention resolution out for a floor vote.

Legislature expands personal care services

Idaho Legislature 1990

BOISE – Sit and wait.

Sometimes it's the best of all political strategies. At least that's what Pam Heward learned Monday when the Idaho House joined the Senate in endorsing a bill to expand the state's personal care services program.

"It just made my faith in the system rise," Heward said after watching the vote from the House gallery.

It was Heward's fourth trip to Boise in a week and she was feeling elated and tired. The House had postponed its debate on the personal care services bill three times.

But then the 36-year-old Heyburn resident is used to sitting. She's been confined to a wheelchair for the past eight years by a neurological illness.

She's is used to waiting, too. As a member of the Idaho Citizens Network, Heward has waited nearly four years for the Idaho Legislature to follow other states' lead in expanding availability of in-home attendant care for the elderly and disabled.

Heward and other Citizens Network members didn't wait helplessly, however. Forming a coalition with other disabled and senior interest groups, the network staged statehouse sit-ins, launched telephone and letter-writing campaigns, posted signs at several key Boise intersections, and even spent time going door-to-door to tell Idahoans why the program expansion is necessary.

Last year they convinced lawmakers to fund an interim study of in-home care needs. The coalition persevered this year, even with the abortion issue diverting lawmakers' attention away from their cause.

"When the going got tough, people said it couldn't be done," Heward said. "But we

Jones, Craig clash over contributions

By CRAIG LINCOLN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The two Republican candidates for retiring Sen. James McClure's seat clashed over campaign contributions here Monday.

Idaho Attorney General Jim Jones shuns contributions from political action committees (PACs), and his opponent in the May Republican primary knows that.

"But I don't know if they have offered him any," said 1st District Rep. Larry Craig.

But PAC money isn't so bad, Craig argued. His comes from such groups as cattlemen and foresters, he said.

"Is that so wrong?" he asked. "I think not."

Jones said PAC contributions have "really corrupted the system." And, he said, that's one reason he calls his candidacy an "uphill fight" – he couldn't get as much campaign money as Craig does even if he wanted to.

"He (Craig) has taken money from 'bad' PACs," Jones said, like ConAgra, a company "that has (agricultural) producers under its thumb."

"But I don't take money from 'bad' PACs," Craig interrupted.

Jones said individual states should have the power to limit or eliminate PAC contributions.

"And then if they put themselves up for sale, give the first option to buy to in-state" committees, Jones said.

Jones and Craig were speaking to the Twin Falls County Republican Women. McClure announced earlier this year he wouldn't seek re-election, ending a 24-year Congressional stint.

Former state legislator and Boise businessman Ron Twilegar will face Idaho Falls consultant David Sleed in the Democratic primary May 22.

2 Jerome County men face cocaine charges

By ANITA DENNIS

JEROME – Two Jerome County residents were arrested Monday night as police and sheriff's deputies set out to serve papers on 10 drug suspects.

Terry William Hughes, 43, and Bobby Gene Arbaugh, 37, were both charged with delivery of a controlled substance, cocaine. Hughes' bond was set at $25,000 and Arbaugh's at $5,000.

The two men's arrests resulted from a pair of one-gram cocaine purchases by a confidential sheriff's department informant, according to arrest papers and Jerome County Sheriff Larry Gold.

A third suspect, Frank Lloyd Bell, 26, already was in the Jerome County Jail on

Tolzin among 3 finalists for school superintendent

BY JENNIFER KAUTH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The School Board released the names of its three superintendent finalists Monday and has scheduled a public question-and-answer session with them Wednesday.

Twin Falls' Acting Superintendent Keith Tolzin is among the finalists. He has led the district of about 7,000 students since last year, when Carl Snow stepped down to become the high school principal.

Robert B. Ellsperman, deputy superintendent of the Salem/Keizer School District in Oregon, is also a finalist. He is second in command of the district – which caters to about 26,500 students and encompasses five high schools, six middle schools and 37 elementary schools.

The third finalist is Terrell L. Donicht of Blackfoot. He is the Pocatello School District's director of secondary education. The district has about 13,500 students.

At the public meeting, each candidate will give a short presentation before answering questions from the public, board Chairman Calvin Lamborn said.

Lamborn predicted the School Board will take a week to mull over the three candidates and listen to the community's response to them before deciding.

Superintendent finalists to meet public Wednesday

The finalists will meet the public at 5 p.m. Wednesday at the O'Leary Junior High School fine arts auditorium.

County commissioners ready to crack down on flying trash

By KIRK MITCHELL

TWIN FALLS – People who lose half their trash in the wind while driving to the Twin Falls County dump may still have to pay as if they had a full load, commissioners say.

Commissioners said at their Monday meeting that they are considering doubling landfill dumping rates for people who do not tie down their trash loads.

"We're going to have to make it hurt," Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said.

Plan to share lottery money among districts passes House

By The Times-News
and The Associated Press

BOISE – If Gov. Cecil Andrus agrees, all 115 Idaho school districts will share an estimated $7.7 million profit from the Idaho Lottery's first year.

Under a bill approved by the House Monday, the portion of Lottery money earmarked for school construction will be divided among all districts through the regular distribution formula, rather than being set aside for matching grants for a few construction projects.

The House passed the bill 72-7 without debate, after agreeing to a Senate amendment limiting the formula change to one year.

The Magic Valley House delegation voted in favor of the revised distribution, except Rep. Gary Robbins, D-Twin Falls. Although he's glad the pay-out will be limited to one year, Robbins said he objects to funneling the money through a "flawed funding formula." Robbins said he also felt the money would be better spent on a few critically needed projects rather than divided among all school districts.

Current state law channels half the net proceeds from the Idaho Lottery, which began last July, into the Permanent Building Fund to pay for general state construction projects. The other half goes into the school building account.

Under rules adopted by the Board of Education, local districts must apply for grants from the public schools portion of the lottery proceeds, proving their needs are critical and their district has made an honest effort to raise taxes for schools in the past.

Local school district distribution

Here's a breakdown of what Magic Valley school districts will receive if Andrus allows the bill to become law:

Blaine County	$22,121.97	Valley	$26,287.92
Camas County	$ 9,135.16	Shoshone	$17,615.05
Cassia County	$181,223.22	Dietrich	$10,890.70
Glenns Ferry	$ 23,917.98	Richfield	$11,839.78
Gooding	$42,787.68	Minidoka County	$179,194.35
Wendell	$38,732.14	Twin Falls	$225,038.74
Hagerman	$15,100.17	Buhl	$55,697.31
Bliss	$10,972.01	Filer	$44,802.91
Jerome	$97,587.87	Kimberly	$41,755.53
		Hansen	$14,863.35
		Three Creek	$ 460.68
		Castleford	$14,656.11

By MICHELLE COLE
Times-News writer

Idaho Legislature 1990

BOISE – Legislation slapping a minimum mandatory five-year prison term on child sex abusers was killed in a late night House Judiciary, Rules and Administration Committee Friday.

"I'm disappointed," Sen. Denton Darrington, R-Declo, said Monday when he learned of his bill's demise. Until the makeup of the House Judiciary committee changes, however, Darrington said it would be pointless to try to resurrect the legislation next year.

Darrington's bill, was co-sponsored by Sen. Karl Brooks, D-Boise, and was endorsed by Gov. Cecil Andrus and Attorney General Jim Jones. It was touted early in the session as the capstone of a bipartisan campaign to put the worst child sex offenders behind bars.

The bill provided for minimum five-year sentences for each one of three circumstances: conviction of a repeat offense; sexually abusing a child 7 years old or younger, possession of child pornography at the time of the crime.

Darrington said he thought the House committee might dispense with two of the aggravating factors but retain mandatory sentencing for repeat offenders.

Instead, the House Judiciary Committee rejected minimum sentencing for child sex abusers for the second year.

Committee member Rep. Celia Gould, R-Buhl, said Monday she plans to work with some of her colleagues over the summer to find a better solution.

She said the informal group is likely to consider rewriting Idaho's lewd and lascivious statute and look at problems involving the state's Victim's Compensation Funds.

Gould and other members of the committee objected to mandatory minimum sentences for child sex abuse because they maintain the sentences don't fit every case and are not always the best solution for the child victim.

School name change on Andrus' desk

BOISE – Among the pieces of legislation piling up on Gov. Cecil Andrus' desk as lawmakers wind up their work this week is a name change proposed by students at the Idaho State School for the Deaf and Blind.

The measure, which passed the House Monday and cleared the Senate earlier this year, asks that the word "state" be dropped from the Gooding school's name.

Superintendent James Rainier explained earlier this winter that the students thought the word "state" gave the school negative connotations. The new name will be: Idaho School for the Deaf and Blind.

Jerome off to Academic Decathalon

BOISE (AP) – Jerome High School will represent Idaho at the Academic Decathlon in Iowa after winning the state competition over the weekend.

Jerome student Josh Hodge was the overall winner with a score of 7,031 for the two-day meet. Nearly 200 Idaho high school students competed for trophies, scholarships and a berth at the April 20-22 national contest in Des Moines, Iowa.

Super quiz winners were Jerome and Preston high schools in the large school division. Teton High School took the honors in the small school division.

Idaho decathlon director Jerry Helgeson of Meridian's Centennial High School said the competition was extremely close with only 433 points separating the top schools.

Winning teams among the larger schools were: Jerome, 33,991; Preston, 33,558; Blackfoot 32,341; Meridian, 31,341; Kuna, 31,306.

The small school leaders were: Butte County, Arco, 32,559; Teton, 32,355; Gooding, 30,789.

Kimberly fire burns shed, van

KIMBERLY – A Sunday night fire burned a shed and a parked van outside a rural Kimberly home, according to Kimberly Fire Chief Robert Vawser.

A Kimberly police officer noticed the blaze and firefighters were dispatched at 11:55 p.m., Vawser said. Occupants of a rental home just 3 feet from the burning shed were awakened and led out of the house, Vawser said.

The cause of the fire, at 3564 North and 3550 East, is under investigation and no damages have been estimated yet, Vawser said. The fire was under control at 1:40 a.m. and caused no injuries, Vawser said.

Prisoner surrenders after taking guard hostage

POINT OF THE MOUNTAIN, Utah (AP) — A Utah State Prison inmate who shot and crippled a Sandy woman more than seven years ago surrendered Monday night after holding a guard at knifepoint for 2½ hours, prison officials said.

There were no injuries, said prison public information officer Dave Franchina.

Kenneth Glen Roberts, 39, released the unidentified guard after prison officials agreed Department of Corrections Director Gary DeLand would look into claims that he's being discriminated against for his crimes.

Roberts is serving five consecutive 5-year-to-life sentences for the 1982 Christmas Eve crime spree in which he shot and paralyzed LaDawn Prue and kidnapped another woman while on release from the prison.

He was serving a sentence for a 1978 rape at the time.

Roberts surrendered after prison officials agreed to make public three demands and release a packet of information to the news media. DeLand said he would not release the information until he had a chance to review it.

His demands included that "Corrections stop retaliating against me for the crimes I committed in 1982 that brought a lot of negative publicity down on Corrections."

He also demanded the prison cease housing him with "inmates who pose a threat to my safety."

Gerald Cooke, director of institutions, said the guard was delivering mail to inmates when he was accosted about 4:05 p.m.

A light in the control room indicated Roberts was locked in the shower but the door wasn't latched.

Washington state regulators angry about report of possible explosions

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — State regulators were angry Monday about a report that some nuclear waste storage tanks at the Hanford nuclear reservation could explode. They scheduled an emergency meeting with Hanford officials to learn more about the problems.

Al Conklin of the state Office of Radiation Protection also criticized the U.S. Department of Energy for releasing the news late on a Friday afternoon without contacting state regulators. He also questioned their downplaying the chances of an explosion.

"When they say the risk is low, but they are offering no guarantees, that bothers me," Conklin said in a telephone interview from Olympia. "I want to know more about it.

"I'm angry," Conklin said. "We're meeting tomorrow morning (Tuesday) and we want answers now."

Conklin said the issue of potentially explosive hydrogen gas in the tanks raises questions about what other unknown dangers are lurking at the federal plutonium production site.

Terry Husseman of the Department of Ecology said it was the second time in six months that the state has been surprised by bad news involving Hanford storage tanks, following earlier disclosures of possible explosion danger from ferrocyanide.

The Ecology Department was assured in 1987 that the issue of potentially explosive storage tanks was being taken care of, Husseman said.

Washington's congressional delegation is aware of the controversy, but has not taken action, said Rick Olson, a spokesman for Republican U.S. Rep. Sid Morrison, who represents the region in Congress.

"He is in an information-gathering mode and the rest of the hill is too," Olson said.

Pam McKinney, spokeswoman for Sen. Brock Adams, D-Wash., said Adams was upset to learn about the hydrogen problem through the news media.

"They should be hearing about it from DOE," Ms. McKinney said. "The senator was very concerned that this was the newest example of DOE's failure to resolve safety issues."

Ken Morgan, a DOE spokesman in Richland, said the news was hastily released late Friday because Hanford manager Mike Lawrence insisted on going public as soon as the danger was known.

"He felt it was important to put it out and he did," Morgan said. The result was that agencies that would normally have been notified before the news conference were not notified.

Lawrence announced that new studies showed that hydrogen building up inside 20 of Hanford's 169 storage tanks could explode and propel radioactivity into the atmosphere.

Lawrence said the DOE does not fully understand the danger, and could not rule out the possibility of an explosion. But he stressed that DOE believed the danger of an explosion was low, The hydrogen in the tanks is the result of the breakdown of organic material added to the tanks in the 1970s.

Conklin said the DOE's pronouncement of the danger as low was not acceptable. He said state regulators wanted to see what risk assessments DOE had performed to draw that conclusion.

did it."

Heward isn't one of those currently in need of a personal care attendent. But that hasn't always been the case.

After a lengthy hospital stay about six years ago, Heward said she was anxious to return home to her husband and two children. The doctor was reluctant to let her go home, however, because of her inability to care for herself.

"I was faced with going into a nursing home and I wanted to be home with my family," she said.

Instead of a nursing home, Heward found someone who would volunteer to help her at home. Not everybody is that lucky.

Heward said an expanded personal care services program will help those who aren't as fortunate. It will provide part-time care for about 2,500 people at an estimated cost to the state of $1.2 million for the first year. The second year is estimated to cost $3.5 million. Funding will also provided through the federal Medicaid program.

Personal care services advocates insist the program will keep health care costs down by keeping the elderly and the disabled out of nursing homes.

"Isn't it time we took care of the seniors and the disabled in this state," said Rep. Ron Black, R-Twin Falls, one of the bill's sponsors.

But those opposed to expanding the program argued in-home personal care is fraught with hidden costs.

"We're embarking on a brand new type of service here that I'm not sure people in the state would approve," said Rep. Mack Neibaur, R-Paul, one of the most vocal opponents of the program expansion.

Neibaur was joined by Rep. Tom Morrison, R-Gooding, in voting against the measure.

"I'm not against the program," Morrison said. "I think it's a great approach. But I don't like the way it's been handled with the money kept separate."

Morrison was referring to a bill to fund the personal care services program, which is still being held in the House Appropriations Committee. Action is expected on that bill today or Wednesday.

With Neibaur and the committee's chairwoman, Rep. Kitty Cuntsey, R-Boise, opposing the program, the funding bill will have a tough time making it out for a full floor vote. But Heward is optimistic.

"It's right," she acknowledged and then added: "How can they shoot it down now?"

"We're just talking about it."

Blue Lakes Boulevard South, which is one route to the county's landfill, is perpetually littered with mattresses, chairs and junk that didn't make it to the dump, Hempleman said.

"It looks like New York City all the time," he said.

The county could fine people for littering, but Hempleman said it is difficult to catch them.

With landfill rates at $2 a cubic yard, an untied loaded pickup would cost about $10, Hempleman said.

Some loads may only require rope to keep them down and other loads may require a canvas-type covering.

"There won't be any 'gray area,'" Hempleman said. "Either it's tied on or it isn't."

In other business, commissioners renewed their contract with Magic Valley Staffing Services to provide medical care for jail inmates.

The company charges $36.50 for the first inmate and $26 for each additional inmate for any given visit.

Hempleman said since signing the contract, fewer inmates have sought medical care because they no longer can go outside to the hospital.

"It was everything for them because they got a ride," he said.

The one-year contract is 4 percent higher than last year, Hempleman said.

an unrelated charge. The other seven had not been found by Monday evening.

With two reporters in tow, officers set out just after 5 p.m. to find the 10 people. Hughes was found first, at a mobile home on 10th Avenue East.

Two Jerome police officers knocked, and Hughes let them in voluntarily, Jerome city officer Jim Baker said.

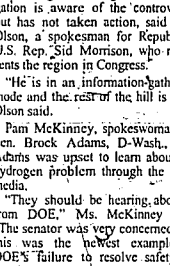

Gold was seeking a search warrant for the mobile home Monday evening, and Bridger the drug-sniffing dog had been summoned.

Arbaugh was spotted in a car and arrested at Birch Street and Avenue C.

The 10 people sought by law officers had been under investigation for several months, Gold said. Four separate groups allegedly were involved, and the investigation included eight to 10 cocaine purchases by informants, Gold said.

Officers obtained arrest warrants for eight of the suspects and summonses for the other two to appear in court.

One of the suspects was believed to be out of the state Monday, Gold said. His car was spotted parked by a house on the west side of town, but when police knocked on the door, they were told he was not there.

Lawmakers still tinkering with 1991 state budget

Idaho Legislature 1990

BOISE (AP) — Idaho legislators, lectured by Gov. Cecil Andrus on fiscal responsibility, on Monday tinkered with their version of the 1991 state budget — a financial blueprint that could run nearly $10 million in the red.

Budget writers slashed more than $200,000 from the financial package for the legislative staff and sidetracked another $1 million earmarked to resolve the feud over compensation to landowners for damage from marauding big game herds.

The Senate-passed money for landowner compensation was part of a negotiated settlement of the depredation problem, worked out by farmers and sportsmen after last year's controversy over damage claims approaching $2 million.

But in a series of moves on both sides of the Capitol, the Senate sent the governor three special tax cuts to siphon more than $1 million a year from the treasury. Senators also prepared to act on a $12.5 million grant package to help local governments repair bridges and roads.

The House endorsed expanded personal care services for the elderly and disabled that will increase the state's financial commitment to social programs by another $1.5 million. Representatives also passed legislation setting up the legal framework for providing big game depredation reimbursement. Both those bills also go to Andrus.

The House Appropriations Committee refused to send the money needed for the depredation program to the floor for final action. But key committee chairmen said the money will have to be provided "if not now, soon."

"The problem will continue to exist if this issue isn't resolved," said Agriculture Committee Chairman Wayne Sutton, R-Midvale.

Senate rejection of the legislative staff budget bills last week prompted the revised measures from the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee, which had to reconvene to handle the matter.

Appropriations Chairman Kathleen Gumsey, R-Boise, offered the scaled back alternatives that cut money for automation of the budget and bill-writing staff and additional staff for the legislative auditor.

"The reason I assume that these failed in the Senate is because people thought they were too much money," Gurnsey said, and no Senate member of the joint committee contradicted her.

But the money shaved from those bills made little difference in the overall budget total, that the administration estimated was at least $9 million overspent. Andrus warned last week that he would take action if needed to make sure the budget was in balance, suggesting he will veto spending and tax legislation he views as unaffordable or bad public policy.

The Senate, however, approved the package of tax-cut bills that would affect self-employed businessmen, consumers buying cars and the new ski resort at Kellogg.

One bill saves self-employed individuals about $400,000 a year in income tax by allowing them to deduct workmen's compensation premiums just as businessmen with employees are allowed to now.

Another reduces the value of a motor vehicle subject to sales tax by the amount of any rebate the manufacturer provides, saving consumers over $500,000 a year. The third exempts from sales tax the aerial tramway being constructed from Kellogg to the renovated Silver Mountain Ski Resort three miles to the north.

The Senate also continued forwarding to Andrus various pieces of the budget plan, generally with little or no debate. Among those measures was one earmarking $465,000 in state cash for cleanup of the uranium mill tailings in the Lowman area. The project has attracted $7 million in federal funds as well.

The state allocation was the target of Republican criticism earlier this year after Andrus' wife was appointed to the board of directors of the Morrison Knudsen Corp. The company has the federal contract to handle the cleanup. Mrs. Andrus resigned the post last month.

The only bill to generate any significant opposition was the $16,000 appropriation for the Women's Commission, which cleared on a 22-16 vote.

Critics said they wanted more financial accountability from the commission, which had been denied state support for much of the 1980s because of its support for the Equal Rights Amendment.

Residents plan rally to protest church

LIVINGSTON, Mont. (AP) — Some local residents say they are planning a rally in front of the City-County Building on Friday to protest what they feel is inaction by the county concerning the environmental consequences of actions by the Church Universal and Triumphant.

Meanwhile, four state officials on Monday began helping Park County authorities inspect bomb shelters being built in the area by the controversial New Age religious group.

A permit has been issued to close Callender Street in front of the City-County Building from noon to 5 p.m. Friday. If fewer than 50 people are at the rally at 2:30 p.m., the street must be reopened, according to terms of the permit.

The permit lists the reason for the rally as "religion and environment."

None of the organizers could be reached for comment on Monday.

But one person familiar with the rally said it will be held to try and encourage public officials to do more to stop the environmental damage being done as a result of the church and its members building fallout shelters in the Paradise Valley.

At least 45 fallout shelters are being constructed near Emigrant, according to state officials, and the church is building its own shelter near Corwin Springs.

Two inspectors from the state Food and Consumer Safety Bureau and two more from the Water Quality Bureau will be making random checks of bomb shelters this week, Park County Sanitarian Ken Anderson said Monday.

Anderson checked several shelters at the church-owned subdivision of Glastonbury last week and said he found most of them to be in violation of septic system codes.

Some had sewage holding tanks, which are illegal in Park County, he said. Others had been hooked up to illegal or improper systems, and at least one had no system at all, he said.

County and state officials have said that the fallout shelters cannot be occupied without approved septic systems.

Anderson said he had located only 30 of the approximately 45 bomb shelters inspected by state electrical inspector Al Lamke.

Senate approves ethics procedure

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Senate on Monday followed the lead of the House, modifying its rules to establish a code of ethics and a procedure for handling alleged violations.

"This is the first step in our adopting an ethics package," Judiciary and Rules Committee Chairman Denton Darrington, R-Declo, said.

But like the House rule change adopted earlier this month, the Senate plan allows any person to file allegations of an ethics violation against an incumbent member, forcing a formal investigation.

Some senators warned that could open the procedure to political manipulation if partisans in either party trumped up allegations just before an election for the sole purpose of forcing an ethics inquiry that could torpedo a re-election campaign.

The push for passage of ethics legislation took on a new life after languishing for several years in the Legislature after Republican lawmakers criticized Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus for a conflict of interest when he allowed his wife to serve a brief tenure on a corporate board. Andrus had been calling for passage of some kind of ethics legislation since he regained the governor's office in 1987.

Under the Senate rule adopted Monday on a 38-4 vote, senators perceiving possible conflicts of interest would make them known before the action prompting the potential conflict, and they could be excused from voting.

The special investigating committees would be appointed as needed when ethics complaints are formally filed against any member.

Republican George Vance of Parma, joined by Anderson and fellow Republicans Dennis Hansen of Soda Springs and Norris Hyde of Emmett, maintained the rule only set up a new system that would actually undermine the citizen Legislature Idaho has tried to maintain.

"The voters will be watching and be able to recognize an unethical legislator," Vance said. "We're not here as judges. We're here as citizens, and we should represent our interests."

Eagles' hot hitting swamps Utah Valley

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

TWIN FALLS — If the College of Southern Idaho baseball team — playing its ninth game in 10 days — was running on one cylinder Monday afternoon, the Eagles had a funny way of showing it.

CSI hammered 14 hits in run-ruling Utah Valley Community College 14–3 in a non-conference contest. That gave the Eagles 29 hits and 24 runs since they returned from a seven-game, eight-day road trip to Arizona on Saturday.

"We're pretty drained, but our hitters were able to come through again," said CSI coach Jim Walker. "I just hope we can keep it up through the weekend. Our pitchers need it."

Outfielder-turned-pitcher Brian Avram, a sophomore right-hander, scattered seven hits and pitched himself out of trouble in the first, fourth, fifth and sixth innings. He walked four, struck out four and stranded five Wolverine baserunners.

"He didn't have his good stuff today, not much pop, but he hung in there," said Walker of Avram, who improved his record to 3–2. "That's going to help (CSI's pitching situation) the rest of the week."

The Eagles still have six games to play this week, including a double-header against Utah Valley at 1 p.m. today at Frontier Field. The week ends with an all-important, conference-opening three-game series against Ricks College here Friday and Saturday.

CSI got on the board against Utah Valley right-hander Eric Smith in the second inning when Jonas Hamlin hit a leadoff single and Don Slattery and Lonnie Reiber walked. Hamlin scored on Stacey Ayers' ground ball, and Slattery and Reiber advanced on Paul Murphy's groundout. Sean Hicks blooped Smith's first offering into right field, driving in Slattery and Reiber.

CSI's Jonas Hamlin slides safely into second base as shortstop Troy Taylor bobbles the ball

The Wolverines got one of those runs back in the fourth when Chet Erickson hit a leadoff double and scored on Guy Trobridge's one-out, two-base hit. Utah Valley cut the deficit to one run in the fifth when Troy Taylor drew a leadoff walk, stole second and scored on Ed Chatterly's one-out single.

But the bottom fell out of the fifth inning for Utah Valley.

The Times-News

JEROME — The Gooding Country Club team ran off with team honors in the annual Jerome Country Club pro-am golf tournament Monday.

Pro Rob Ellis and amateurs Steve Nance, Ernie Sites, Lynn LaCroix and John Schubert posted a 30-under-par 114 to beat the other 33 teams in the field.

Nance's 76 game him gross honors in the 12-over handicap division while Earl Molyneux won net with a 64. In the 0–11 division, Ddn Hernandez, Boise, won with a one-over 73 while Jim Meyers of Rexburg claimed net at 65.

Twin Falls Muni pro Mike Hamblin won the professional sweeps with a five-under 67, one ahead of Ron Ptacek of Boise and John Graham of Idaho Falls.

Twin Falls ladies' golf group slates breakfast, style show

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Municipal Ladies' Golf Association will hold its annual breakfast and style show Thursday morning at the Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course.

The event is scheduled for 8 a.m. in the clubhouse, followed by a best-ball, blind-draw tournament, weather permitting. Cost for the breakfast and style show is $6.50 and the cost to play in the tournament is $5. Greens fees will be waived.

Anyone planning to play in the tournament should call the clubhouse today to make reservations. Those unable to attend the breakfast but who wish to play in the tournament should call the clubhouse. The number is 733–2137.

Twin Falls' Horner to join team headed Down Under

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls High School senior John Horner has been selected to play in an all-star football game in Sydney, Australia, next summer.

The game will be an all-state contest pitting teams of graduating Utah and Idaho prep stars. It is scheduled for June 25.

Horner, a quarterback, set the single-season Twin Falls High passing record last fall in leading the Bruins to a 6–4 finish.

ISU to announce new basketball coach

The Times-News

POCATELLO — Idaho State University has called a press conference for this morning to announce the hiring of Michigan State University assistant Herb Williams as ISU's new head basketball coach.

The 43-year-old Williams, who has been an assistant to Michigan State coach Jud Heathcote for six years, arrived here with his family on Monday, three days after the Spartans were eliminated from the NCAA Basketball Tournament.

An ISU spokesman on Monday refused to confirm that Williams had accepted the job, but the school's interim athletic director, Kelly Wiltbank, said on Friday it had been offered to him.

Williams, who will become the first black head basketball coach in ISU history and only the second in Big Sky history, succeeds Jim Boutin, who resigned March 5 after ISU finished 6–21, the school's worst record in four decades.

Williams, one of 60 applicants for the job, was recommended by Heathcote, who coached at the University of Montana from 1972 through 1976.

Williams grew up in the southern Indiana city of Evansville and attended Evansville University, where he placed for the Purple Aces during their NCAA Division II championship seasons of 1964 and 1965.

He was a high coach for 10 years before joining Heathcote on the Michigan State staff in 1985.

The press conference is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. in the Bennion Room in Holt Arena.

Baseball asks for court order to force umpires back to work

The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Major league baseball has asked a federal court to prevent umpires from boycotting spring training games, saying it would violate no-strike and grievance clauses in their contract.

A hearing on the request for a temporary restraining order is set for 10 a.m. Tuesday before U.S. District Judge Norma L. Shapiro.

Baseball filed papers Sunday, however they were not released until Monday afternoon.

Attorneys for the American and National Leagues and the umpires' union were not immediately reachable by telephone.

Richie Phillips, head of the umpires' union, has said umpires would not work spring training to protest the way regular-season games were rescheduled after the recent lockout ended. The umpires said they should have been consulted before the reshuffling was final.

Phillips said umpires would return to work for opening day, April 9.

Exhibition games started in Florida and Arizona on Monday with minor league umpires working games.

The complaint said the leagues' collective bargaining agreement with the umpires, in effect through Dec. 31, contains mandatory grievance and arbitration procedures for settling disputes between the parties.

It also quoted Article XIX of baseball's basic agreement:

"The Association agrees that there shall be no strike nor other concerted work stoppage during the period of this Agreement and further that it will use its best efforts to cause each umpire faithfully to carry out their obligations as employees."

The leagues cited several "adverse consequences" of the umpires' boycott, including an inability to hold spring training games and prepare players for the regular season.

They also said it would prevent them from fulfilling contractual commitments to third parties, including those holding television and radio rights.

Spring training games start after 32-day delay

By JIM DONAGHY
The Associated Press

The sound of the crack of the bat and fans booing umpires on Monday meant baseball was back.

The umpires, however, remained off the job.

After a week of getting ready following the end of the 32-day lockout, spring training games started in Florida and Arizona.

And, it didn't take long for some familiar heroes to come through.

In Scottsdale, Ariz., Gary Carter made his debut in a San Francisco uniform and doubled home the winning run with two outs in the ninth inning to give the Giants a 4-3 victory over Cleveland in a nationally televised game (ESPN).

Carter, signed as a free agent by the Giants, is trying to make a comeback after an injury-plagued season with the New York Mets. Last season, he hit .183 with two homers and 15 RBIs. The Mets chose not to resign him after the season.

Carter's bloop double to right-center field scored Jamie Cooper from first base with the game-winning run.

Like all the other spring training games on Monday, minor league umpires were in charge.

The major league umpires are upset that baseball did not consult them before revising the regular-season schedule, and are threatening to stay away until opening day. They say they lost money during the lockout and contend the changes will mean fewer days off.

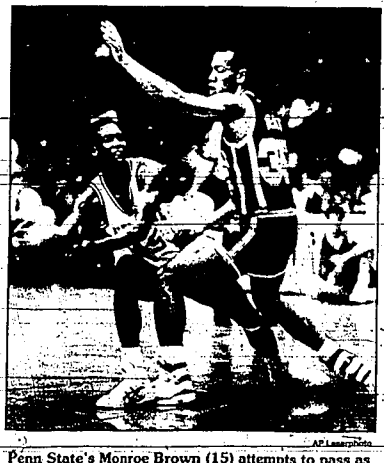

Dan Wickham was one of the minor league umpires working at spring training while major league umps are away in protest. And he had just settled behind home plate for the Cleveland-San Francisco game when Rick Reuschel threw the first pitch.

Mitch Webster took. Wickham called ball. Catcher Kirt Manwaring held his glove in place, challenging.

"Open your eyes, ump!" a fan shouted. "You're missing

St. Louis, Vanderbilt set to meet in contest for NIT championship

NEW YORK — St. Louis, looking for its first NIT championship in 42 years, may have the inside-outside combination it needs to win the title.

Anthony Bonner had 24 points and 19 rebounds and Jeff Luechtefeld scored a career-high 19 points Monday night, leading the Billikens into the final of the NIT for the second consecutive year with an 80-73 victory over New Mexico.

Luechtefeld, averaging only 6.5 points for the season but 14.8 in four NIT games, and Bonner carried the Billikens into Wednesday's title game against Vanderbilt, which beat Penn State 75-62 in the first semifinal.

Luechtefeld, a junior from tiny Okawville, Ill., hit 32.1 percent of his 3-pointers during the season, but he has made 13 of 29 (44.8 percent) during the NIT, including five of 10 against New Mexico.

"I didn't feel loose the whole year; I was fighting with myself and putting pressure on myself to put in the threes," Luechtefeld said. "I felt that to win the tournament, we have to play loose. I've felt loose in all four games."

Bonner, the nation's leading rebounder with 13.7 per game, scored eight points in

Romanian claims roots of baseball

By ROB GOSTER
The Associated Press

BUCHAREST, Romania — Fans across America might eagerly be awaiting the start of the oina season if an American had not changed a few rules and renamed it baseball, according to a Romanian sports official.

Adding his voice to the decades-old debate over the origin of baseball, Cristian Costescu said the American pastime derived from the ancient game of oina, which was introduced to the United States by a pair of Transylvanians.

Costescu, president of the new Romanian Baseball Federation, says the two immigrants from the Romanian village of Alba Iulia joined the U.S. Army and taught the game to their comrades.

Among their comrades was a young officer named Abner Doubleday, who changed a few rules and created baseball in 1839, Cotescu said in an interview.

"We are not saying that Romania invented baseball. We would not like someone else to tell us oina was invented by others," said Costescu. "But we are saying this: some little inspiration for baseball was from oina. Baseball is more sophisticated than oina, but the structure is the same."

Romanians claim oina was invented by shepherds in the first century and say documents from 1310 describe a variation of the game called hoina being played in southern Romania.

Oina has 11 men per side, with one team batting and the other in the field. Each side is allowed one at-bat, in which all 11 players take the plate.

A pitcher is provided by the team at bat and he serves up a lazy underhand toss. The batter tries to hit the ball as far as possible, then has to run 120 yards through nine bases.

Agassi captures 2nd title in 1990

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) — Andre Agassi beat Stefan Edberg in four sets Sunday to capture the International Players Championships for his second title this year.

The 6-1, 6-4, 0-6, 6-2 victory over Edberg avenged a four-set loss to the Swede two weeks earlier at a tournament in Indian Wells, Calif.

The tournament boosted Edberg from third to second in the world rankings and Agassi from fifth to fourth. Agassi was as high as third in 1988 but slipped to seventh last year.

Raiders sign Brown as cornerback

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — The Los Angeles Raiders, in an attempt to revive the faltering career of Los Angeles Ram receiver Ron Brown, signed him from the Plan B free agency list Monday — as a cornerback.

Brown was a cornerback for his first three years at Arizona State. He was an Olympic gold medalist as a member of the 400-yard relay team in 1984, an All-Pro kick returner in '85, and won football's fastest-man competition in '86.

Brown retired before the '88 season to attempt an Olympic comeback, but returned to the Rams after failing to qualify for the Seoul Games.

Brown earned $265,000 last season. A source said that the Raiders signed him to a $2 million, four-year package.

5 Sage gymnasts advance to Level 6

TWIN FALLS — Five Level 5 Sage Gymnastics gymnasts scored 31 or better last weekend and qualified for Level 6 in a dual meet with Wood River.

Those advancing were Sarah Eldridge, Elly Franson, Tamar Conner, Jennifer Backus and Ashlee Herzinger.

High scores for Sage were Marjie Lutz, who had a 9.15 on the vault, and Herzinger, who had an 8.85 on the uneven bars.

Top all-around scorers were Conner for Level 5 and Lutz for Level 6.

Houston whips slumping Spurs, 113-95

HOUSTON (AP) — Otis Thorpe scored 22 of his 30 points in the first half and hit a career-high 86 percent of his shots to lead the Houston Rockets to a 113-95 victory over the San Antonio Spurs Monday night.

Akeem Olajuwon finished with 27 points and 18 rebounds and Mitchell Wiggins added 14 points for Houston.

David Robinson led San Antonio with 24 points, followed by Terry Cummings with 18 and Willie Anderson with 17.

After trailing 10-8, the Rockets went on an 18-5 scoring run to move ahead 26-15. Houston continued to dominate in the second quarter behind Thorpe, outscoring San Antonio 12-2 to lead 54-36 with 5:05 left in the second quarter.

The Rockets led 63-49 at the half.

Chicago 121 Phoenix 92

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan scored 28 points and Scottie Pippen had 27 Monday night as the Chicago Bulls defeated Phoenix 121-92, snapping the Suns' five-game road winning streak.

Jordan sat out the entire fourth quarter as the Bulls led by as many as 33 points. Chicago won for the seventh time in its last nine contest and is now 28-5 at home.

Tom Chambers led the Suns with 20 points and Kevin Johnson had 17.

Atlanta 113 Denver 102

ATLANTA (AP) — Dominique Wilkins scored 36 points and Moses Malone added 25 points and 18 rebounds, leading the Atlanta Hawks to a 113-102 victory over the Denver Nuggets Monday night.

Wilkins hit 10 of 18 shots and 15 of 17 free throws as Atlanta beat the Nuggets for the first time in their last five meetings.

Cleveland 116 Sacramento 95

RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP) — Brad Daugherty scored 26 points and Chucky Brown had nine in a key 3½-minute stretch of the fourth quarter as the Cleveland Cavaliers defeated the Sacramento Kings 116-95 Monday night.

The Cavaliers have won seven of their last nine games and have an eight-game winning streak at home.

Charlotte 97 New Jersey 83

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Armon Gilliam scored 13 straight second-period points and the Charlotte Hornets went on to hand the New Jersey Nets a team record-breaking 24th consecutive road loss, 97-83, Monday night.

It was the Nets' 11th straight loss and their 30th in 33 games.

Leazer edges Baird for high-game honors

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Bob Leazer edged Lynn Baird for the best game in city league bowling action last week.

Laurie Shouse's 236 at the Magic Bowl was the best women's game of the week, but just barely. Cathy McGowan turned in a 235 at the Bowladrome.

McGowan, however, had the week's best women's series, a 600, three pins better than Debbie Degner's 597 at the Bowladrome.

the final six minutes for St. Louis (21-11), which lost to St. John's in last year's championship game. The Billikens, making their 15th National Invitation Tournament appearance, won the event in 1948 and lost in the final in 1961 and 1989.

"Losing to St. John's last year is our inspiration to win it this year," Bonner said.

"Bonner is the Real McCoy," New Mexico coach Dave Bliss said of the 6-foot-8, 225-pound forward. "That's what a basketball player should look like. I told my recruiters to get me one of those. He's a man playing a man's game."

New Mexico (20-13), making a record seventh consecutive appearance in the NIT but its first trip to the semifinals since 1964, was led by Darrell McGee with 23 points, 18 in the second half.

But the Lobos shot only 39.2 percent from the field. Other than McGee's 9-for-14, they were 20-for-60.

"St. Louis is a good offensive team, but a better defensive team," Bliss said.

"Our shot selection was bad," McGee said. "That was the key to the loss. We got frustrated."

Luc Longley, the Lobos' 7-2 junior center averaging 18.5 points and 9.5 rebounds, finished with 12 points and 18 rebounds.

The Billikens led 53-49 with 10 minutes left after a 3-pointer by McGee before Charles Newberry, who scored 15 points, hit consecutive 3-pointers for a 10-point St. Louis advantage.

and John Greene singled, and both advanced on a wild pitch. Rob Helton, inserted as a defensive replacement for Brendon Peach the inning before, singled sharply to right to drive in both runs, making it 5–2 CSI. Hamlin's ground ball forced Helton at second, but Hamlin reached base on a fielder's choice, stole second and scored on Slattery's double to right. Slattery was thrown out trying to stretch the double into a triple, but Reiber got aboard on a throwing error by Smith and Ayers followed with a single. Reiber scored on an error by Wolverine third baseman Chatterly, and Ayers went to second base. That sent Smith to the showers.

His relief, left-hander Adam Larraby, got into immediate trouble, giving up three straight singles to Murphy, Hicks and Schow, with Murphy driving in Ayers. Larraby got out of the inning on a fly ball by Greene, but by then CSI held an 8–2 lead.

The Wolverines picked up a single run in the top of the sixth, but CSI struck for eight runs in the bottom of the frame off Larraby and the third Utah Valley pitcher, Peter Young. Utah Valley failed to score in the top of the seventh, ending the game under the 10–run rule.

Greene and Hicks had three hits apiece for CSI, while Helton, Ayers and Murphy had two each. Hicks, CSI's No. 9 hitter, drove in four runs.

The victory left CSI 9–8 for the season.

Red Sox 2, Royals 1

At Haines City, rookie Mickey Pina's eighth-inning home run off Mark Davis, last year's National League Cy Young Award winner, gave Boston 2 victory over Kansas City.

Pina's home run cleared the left-field bleachers and spoiled the Royals' debut of Davis, who signed as a free agent from the San Diego Padres for $13 million over four years.

Dodgers 13, Twins 6

At Orlando, Hubie Brooks and Eddie Murray each hit solo home runs in Los Angeles' seven-run eighth inning as the Dodgers beat Minnesota. Five of the seven runs were unearned.

Pirates 5, Cardinals 3

At Bradenton, Barry Bonds and newcomer Don Slaught homered as Pittsburgh defeated St. Louis.

Geronimo Pena had a two-run triple in the sixth off rookie Stan Belinda to cut the Pirates' lead to 4-3, but Slaught homered in his first at-bat in a Pirates' uniform in the bottom of the inning. The Pirates obtained Slaught from the New York Yankees in December for pitchers Jeff Robinson and Willie Smith.

Yankees 5, Braves 4

At Fort Lauderdale, Steve Balboni's two-out, two-run double highlighted a four-run sixth inning to help New York beat Atlanta.

Consecutive doubles by newcomers Jim Presley and Ernie Whitt had given Atlanta a 1-0 lead in the fifth inning before the Yankees rallied.

Expos 5, Orioles 3

At Miami, Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd made his debut with Montreal with three scoreless innings as the Expos beat Baltimore. Rookie Delino DeShields had three hits and an RBI and Tim Wallach drove in four runs.

Mets 7, Astros 2

At Kissimmee, the New York Mets, sparked by rookies and newcomers, snapped a tie with three runs apiece in the eighth and ninth innings to beat Houston.

Mariners 7, Brewers 0

At Tempe, Edgar Martinez drove in two runs and five Seattle pitchers held Milwaukee to three hits. Ken Griffey Jr. had two doubles and scored twice for the Mariners.

Padres 9, Angels 2

At Yuma, Roberto Alomar had three hits, drove in three runs and stole two as San Diego beat California. The teams committed a total of seven errors, four by the Angels during a five-run San Diego fourth inning in which all five runs were unearned.

Athletics 6, Cubs 5

At Phoenix, pinch-hitter Steve Howard bounced a two-run single to center with two out and the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth inning as defending World Series champion Oakland beat Chicago.

Ryne Sandberg hit a two-run home run for the Cubs in the third inning.

Stocks rise after Japanese rally

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market managed a small gain Monday on the strength of early buying encouraged by a rally in Japanese stock prices and a drop in domestic interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up about 20 points in the early going, settled for a 3.38 gain at 2,707.66.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 4 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 826 up, 664 down and 491 unchanged.

The recently battered Tokyo stock market began to rebound on Friday. It surged ahead nearly 5 percent Monday for its second largest gain on record.

Analysts said that prompted hopes that turmoil in the Japanese markets might subside without having caused many ripple effects in other financial centers around the world.

At the same time, the dollar continued its recent climb against the Japanese yen in foreign exchange.

The U.S. bond market, which has benefited from the dollar's strength, extended its recent rally, pushing interest rates lower.

But activity in U.S. stocks set a sluggish pace all day, and as the session progressed prices failed to hold at their early peaks. Brokers cited worries about unpleasant surprises in forthcoming earnings reports for the first quarter.

Among actively traded blue chips, American Telephone & Telegraph rose ⅛ to 41⅞ as the company launched its venture into the credit

Former energy official warns of higher bill for imported oil

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rising prices and growing demand soon will push the U.S. bill for imported oil higher than the nation's 1990 trade deficit, former Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger told Congress Monday.

"There is a strong possibility of a 30 percent or 40 percent increase in prices" in the 1990s, Schlesinger said in presenting the Senate Energy Committee a gloomy summary of the world oil outlook.

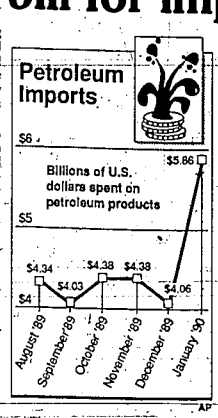

"That we will have a price surge in the decade seems to me to be beyond question."

U.S. demand for oil will grow by about 2 percent a year until there are steep price increases, Schlesinger said. In a recent month, he added, the United States had to rely on foreign sources to meet a record 54 percent of its oil demand.

Schlesinger, also a former secretary of defense and director of the Central Intelligence Agency, said that U.S. imports should reach as much as 11 million barrels a day by 1995, compared with a net average of just over 7 million barrels a day in 1989.

"The oil-import bill then will likely exceed our present trade deficit," he said.

The 1990 trade deficit is about $100 billion.

"That statement, if correct, is of profoundest concern to the U.S. economy," said Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., chairman of the committee.

While domestic demand for oil has been growing, Schlesinger said, U.S. production continues to fall. Drilling activity is low by historical standards, he said, and the giant Prudhoe Bay field in Alaska is in declining production.

"Dependency (on foreign oil) will continue to grow, although the pace can still be affected by our policy decisions," Schlesinger said.

While the U.S. appetite for imported oil grows toward 65 percent, "the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (our chief surviving element of protection against a cutoff) will have shrunk in real terms from roughly 100 days to 60 days of imports," he said.

"We may as well acknowledge that over the past decade the United States as a practical matter abandoned the quest for energy independence — indeed, even the quest for low energy dependency," Schlesinger said. "If we are to limit our future vulnerability, either for national security or international financial reasons, we shall have to reverse course — and take vigorous action."

Schlesinger's formula for reducing imports includes increased conservation, more tax incentives for domestic producers and expanded drilling.

Relying on renewable energy sources — such as solar energy — will not solve the problem because those sources do little for transportation, which is responsible for the growth in demand for oil, he said.

S&L industry posts record losses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The savings and loan industry lost a record $19.17 billion in 1989 after posting its worst fourth-quarter loss, the government reported Monday.

Analysts said the erosion would continue this year, although at a slower pace.

The fourth-quarter loss totaled $6.5 billion, up from $4.97 billion in the July-September period, and pushed the yearly total to a third consecutive record deficit.

The red ink was $13.4 billion in 1988 and $7.8 billion in 1987.

James Freund, acting chief economist of the Office of Thrift Supervision, said most of the losses were suffered by institutions that have either been taken over by the government or are scheduled to be taken over under the S&L bailout law passed by Congress in August.

"OTS is carrying out (the bailout law) mandate of weeding out the insolvent and unsalvageable institutions that are compiling the big losses, and transferring them to the RTC's control for eventual sale or liquidation," Freund said.

The RTC, or Resolution Trust Corp., is charged in the bailout legislation with disposing of the failed institutions. It has gotten rid of 52 S&Ls and announced plans recently to close or sell another 140 by the end of June.

The RTC has been criticized recently for not acting quickly enough in disposing of the troubled S&Ls. Freund said that failure to shut down the institutions cost the government $2.6 billion in the fourth quarter at an average of $29 million a day.

However, Freund said the industry would be smaller and the losses would be smaller by this time next year.

Analysts: Fed not likely to loosen grip

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve, despite pressure from the Bush administration to lower interest rates, isn't likely to budge from its tight-money stance when policy-makers meet this week, private analysts said Monday.

The forecast, if correct, would mean that a variety of business and consumer interest rates — including mortgage rates — will stay about where they are over the next couple of months.

Fed policy-makers will convene behind closed doors Tuesday to review economic developments and make decisions on what adjustments are needed in monetary strategy.

"This will be a stand-pat meeting," predicted Allen Sinai, chief economist of the Boston Co.

"The economy is growing, although weakly, while at the same time inflation is unacceptably high," he said. "We have a tug of war between those two factors and that will produce no change."

The Fed last eased credit policy slightly just before Christmas. But in the past three months, the central bank has resisted pressure from the administration to lower interest rates further as a way of boosting sluggish economic growth.

Earlier this month, a published report quoted an unnamed presidential adviser as saying President Bush was "mad as hell" and would not reappoint Alan Greenspan as chairman of the Federal Reserve next year because of Greenspan's refusal to heed administration pleas for a looser credit policy.

Private economists said they expected the central bank would resist the administration's lobbying for lower rates and opt to hold rates unchanged because of a variety of

NOTICE OF RULE HEARING

SUBJECT: Titling of Specially Constructed and Reconstructed Motor Vehicles

ACTION: This action, under Docket No B07-9001, Chapter B, Rule 07, of the Idaho Transportation Board involves the hearing on a new rule

DESCRIPTIVE SUMMARY. The following is a descriptive summary of the substance of the hearing and of the principal issues involved.

Titling instructions have been established for the classification of motor vehicles entitled specially constructed or reconstructed. This rule implemented the provisions of legislation passed in 1989 and effective January 1, 1990.

PUBLIC HEARING SCHEDULE: A public hearing will be held on the new rule on April 17, 1990, at 10:00 a.m. in Room 201 of the Transportation Building at 3311 West State Street in Boise, Idaho. The hearing site will be accessible to the physically disabled. Interpreters for non-English speaking persons or persons with hearing impairments, and braille or taped information for persons with visual impairments can be provided upon five days' notice. For arrangements, contact the undersigned at 208/334-8804.

AVAILABILITY OF RULE FOR PUBLIC REVIEW: Interested parties may review the rule of the Idaho Transportation Board in Room 201 at 3311 West State Street, Boise, Idaho. Copies of the rule will be made available, free of charge, upon written request specifying the docket number cited above.

SUBMISSION OF WRITTEN COMMENTS, ASSISTANCE ON TECHNICAL QUESTIONS: Any individual or industry who may be affected by the rule is encouraged to submit information concerning the anticipated economic impact. All written comments and data must be directed to the undersigned and must be postmarked, or delivered, on or before April 20, 1990, to become an official part of the record. For assistance on technical questions concerning the rule, contact Morris W. Detmar, Titles/Dealer Operations Manager at 334-8659, or in Room 114, 3311 West State Street, Boise, Idaho, between the hours of 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m., Mountain Time, Monday through Friday.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

BOBBY WOLFF

"To most men, experience is like the stern lights of a ship which illumine only the track it has passed."
— Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

Futile Willie was one of S.J. Simon's memorable characters. He knew just enough about the game to get himself into deep trouble. Here's an example of Futile Willie at the local bridge club.

Willie ruffed the third diamond, cashed the ace and king of clubs, and ruffed a club in dummy. Facing an unavoidable spade loser, Willie had to pick up the trumps without loss.

Willie reasoned that the odds were heavily in favor of East holding the trump king. West had bid two suits and followed three times in clubs. Therefore, he could have at most one heart. The odds were 4-1 that East held the heart king. Accordingly Willie finessed in trumps and lost to the singleton king. Later the defenders scored a spade trick, and the game suffered one down.

Willie's analysis of the distribution was impeccable, but his execution was awful. Even if East had held the trump king, a finesse would have served no useful purpose. The only hope of making the game was in finding the singleton king offside and picking it off by playing the trump ace.

See how Futile Willie operates? He knows enough to count West's distribution; then he makes a silly play that can't win.

Burnett's fans think they should have been asked

By Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. What Hollywood star gets the weirdest hate mail?

A. Carol Burnett, it seems. Some of her fans have turned against her because she dared to have plastic surgery without their consent.

Subtracting four millimeters from a chin that once nearly overhung her bosom, she transformed the contours of her face dramatically enough to cause many adoring, strangely twisted Carol-watchers to complain via letters and post cards. They feel cheated because she's forfeited all her old comic distinction, they say, to become "just another pretty face" (they truly are twisted).

Carol couldn't care less what they think. She likes her new face — and new unwitchlike chin — a whole lot. "It makes all the difference!" she says. She rejects the idea of re-invention and substitutes instead: "Adjusting, adapting to new circumstances at every stage along the way. Isn't that life?" she asks. "Audiences know what I looked like then; here's what I look like now.

Q. Do Paul and Linda McCartney still smoke pot?

Carol Burnett, right, with daughter Carrie, looks great

A. If the McCartneys do toke up — and they neither deny or embrace such a notion — they do it in private quarters where they can't be caught or photographed. Their fondness for flouting pot laws here and there has got them in trouble in the past, and they vow never to be in a position where they could be busted again.

Linda — Paul's debatably talented wife who, to her credit, does play a mean tambourine — spent two hours in an L.A. jail in 1975 because of the wicked weed. "I had a great time on my bust actually," she says, willing to discuss a topic her husband shies away from. "I got quite friendly with the police. I remember turning on the TV the next morning to a Spanish station and they had a great illustration of me. I looked so glamorous!"

More seriously, Paul clocked 10 days in a Japanese cell in 1980, after being inspected and busted at an airport in that strict land. A series of Wings concerts had to be canceled. "I was sleepless," says Linda. "It was the worry of what was going to happen to Paul. I said 'My God, his fate is in these people's hands.'"

Q. What's the story with Madonna and Sandra Bernhard? Are they lovers, or what?

A. What. They're just friends, never were more than that. How DO these vicious rumors get started?

"I've got to be honest," says Bernhard, whose play-turned-film, "Without You, I'm Nothing," opens this month. "That was never something that was planned or that was intentional at all. We never said, 'Let's go out and be lesbians.' It was really like: Let's just be girlfriends — silly, juvenile girlfriends. The whole lesbian thing being read into it was just stupid, ridiculous."

Bernhard — one of our most overexposed celebrities — blames the press. "They see Madonna, and they see someone going out with her and they're going to read something into it. It's all so geeky, so embarrassing. We're tired of the whole thing."

NEW CANAAN, Conn. (AP) — A woman who once claimed she was David Letterman's wife was charged last week with breaking into the talk-show host's home for a sixth time — two days after her release from prison for an earlier break-in.

Margaret Ray, 37, of Crawford, Colo., was arrested and charged with first-degree trespassing when she was found near the tennis court on Letterman's property, said police Sgt. Nick Warren. Letterman called to report seeing her in the hallway of his home, Warren said.

Ray was held overnight on $1,000 bond and taken to Norwalk Superior Court where a psychiatric evaluation was ordered, said a spokeswoman in the public defender's office. Ray was taken to the Niantic State Prison for women and is due back in court April 4. It was Ray's sixth arrest in two years for bothering the host of NBC's "Late Night with David Letterman."

DAVID LETTERMAN
Put away the welcome mat

Ray, who last year described Letterman as the "dominant figure in my life," was first arrested in May 1988, when she was stopped driving his Porsche near the Lincoln Tunnel in New York City. She identified herself as Mrs. Letterman and her son as David Jr. when she was unable to pay the $3 toll.

Authorities said she took the car after breaking into his house and setting up housekeeping. Letterman initially declined to press charges, but she was charged with trespassing when she returned a second time.

Watch for those movie classics

It's a blend of old and new as The Family Channel celebrates national cable month in April with an explosion of film fare.

"Across Five Aprils," the world premiere film of an Illinois boy whose town and family is torn up by the Civil War, airs at 8 p.m. April 21. The movie also airs on April 23 and 27.

The April 21 showing caps a week of family film fare that includes the color converted version of "Black Beauty," the romantic classic of a young woman's devotion to her beautiful horse, starring Mona Freeman and Richard Denning. "Black Beauty" airs April 6 and 20 at 8 p.m.

The Family Film Festival also includes "Rascals and Robbers," the hilarious adventure of Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn who foil a nefarious swindler trying to bilk the town of its hard-earned savings.

The movie stars Anthony Michael Hall and airs on April 17 at 8 p.m.

Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. What ever happened to Ann Blyth?

A. She was born Aug. 16, 1928, in Mount Kisco, N.Y. She married Dr. James McNulty (brother of the late singer Dennis Day) in 1953 and had five children.

Early years: Blyth started singing on radio at age 5. She appeared for three seasons with the San Carlo Opera. She signed her first movie contract at 15 and made her movie debut in "Chip Off the Old Block."

Famous: As a juvenile in musicals with Donald O'Connor and Peggy Ryan; as a dramatic actress in "Mildred Pierce" (for which she received an Oscar nomination) and as a musical star in "The Great Caruso" and her final movie, "The Helen Morgan Story."

In recent years: Blyth retired from movies in 1957. She does occasional musical stage and TV appearances. She lives in California.

The greats honored the dance teacher

NEW YORK (AP) — They borrowed a Broadway theater to celebrate the 65th birthday of Luigi Faccuito, a long-time performer and dance teacher whose students have included top names of the stage and screen.

Several hundred friends and associates gathered for the tribute at the Helen Hayes Theater. Faccuito, known simply as Luigi, was lured to the theater on the pretext of attending a reading. Dozens of his students were on stage to greet him, playing out the jazz dances that he is largely credited with developing.

Actor Robert Morse, currently starring on Broadway in "Tru," and Loni Ackerman of "Cats," were co-hosts of the show. Performers included actor Tony Roberts, opera singer Clamma Dale and stage stars Gretchen Wyler, Donna McKechnie and Yvonne Constant.

GENE KELLY

Roberts read a Happy Birthday letter. Gene Kelly, Joel Grey, Liza Minnelli and Mayor David Dinkins sent messages. The office of the president of the New York borough of Manhattan proclaimed March 21 "Luigi Day" in the borough. The gathering saw clips of several films in which he danced, mainly as an associate of Gene Kelly, including "Gotta Dance," "Singin' In The Rain," and "On The Town."

How to mix high fashion and burpcloths, perhaps

Kim Alexis, one of the world's top models, has been signed as host of a new show original and exclusive to The Family Channel.

Alexis, whose face has graced the covers of Glamour, Vogue, and all major fashion magazines, will bring her interest in children (she has two) and fitness to "Healthy Kids," a half-hour series debuting April 3, 1990.

This show will be the only authoritative program on children's health with the American Academy of Pediatrics consulting, reviewing and, otherwise involved in all aspects of the content.

"Healthy Kids," with 26 episodes, will air Tuesdays and Thursdays at 12:30 p.m., alternating with two showings of "American Baby." The show is geared to parents of children birth to 4 years old.

Keisha Knight Pulliam of "The Cosby Show," Lyle Alzado of the L.A. Raiders, Rex Smith of Broadway, sports commentator Jayne Kennedy, Rosey Grier and Shari Lewis will join host Alexis for a "Healthy Kids" special on April 1 at 8 p.m. (Eastern/Pacific).

The special, "The Great American Healthy Kids Quiz," will feature celebrities testing their knowledge regarding children's health and will serve as a kick-off to the new series.

Alexis began her modeling career in the summer of 1978 in her home town of Lockport, N.Y., a suburb of Buffalo. Her original plan was to earn some extra money before entering the University of Rhode Island's prestigious five-year pharmacy program.

Kim poses with her sons

She was immediately spotted by the president of a top New York City modeling agency who convinced her parents that she should delay college. She did, and over the next several years rose to the top of her field.

An avid runner, Alexis has participated in both the New York City and L'Eggs marathons several years in a row.

She and her husband, real estate developer Jim Stockton, have two children, ages 3 years and 4 months.

Let's return to scene of crime

By the Los Angeles Times

Q: Any word on when "Crime Story" with Dennis Farina will be repeated?

A: You and the many other readers who have kept that question coming to Talkback since the series ended its run on NBC will be happy to know that cable's USA Network will be repeating "Crime Story." The two-hour pilot will be shown March 29. Aside from "Beauty and the Beast" and "The Days and Nights of Molly Dodd," there have been few canceled series that have generated such a "when will it be shown again?" response as Michael Mann's "Crime Story."

Q: I say that Richard Dean Anderson of "MacGyver" was once on the daytime soap opera "General Hospital." My friend says no. Who's right?

A: You are. Anderson first appeared in the role of Dr. Jeff Webber on the ABC soap opera in 1976 and played the role for five years. After bowing out of that series, he went prime time as a regular on "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers" and "Emerald Point N.A.S." before landing the title role in "MacGyver."

Q: Who plays K.C. on "China Beach" and is that her in the movie "Always"?

A: It is Marg Helgenberger, who you may remember from Margot Kidder's brief 1987 series "Shell Game." She was the daughter of the TV station owner and fiancee of the male lead (James Read) in that show. Before that, she played Siobhan on "China Beach." And, yes, the "Ryan's Hope." Prime-time guest native of Fremont, Neb., has a appearances preceded her role on role in "Always."

Crime Story strike force struck a chord with TV viewers

It's videos by an earlobe

By Knight-Ridder News Service

On Sunday night's edition of television's newest, hottest national habit — "America's Funniest Home Videos" ... A man performs "Dueling Banjos" with his earlobes. A cat plays pool. A fisherman puts a rubber worm in his mouth, dives overboard and surfaces with a fish between his lips!

ABC's "America's Funniest Home Videos" is sweeping the nation: The Sunday night half-hour show is the season's lone major new hit. Producer Steve Paskay loves his show's wacky content. A clip that earns his praise is a man parachuting in a lawn chair from a plane.

"Did you ever see Angela Lansbury do that?" he asks. (The explanation, perhaps, for why "Home Videos" has dethroned Lansbury's "Murder, She Wrote" as winner of the 8 p.m. time slot. Murder appeals mainly to older viewers; "Home Videos" registers most strongly with the 18-to-49 set.)

Griffith must have had one heck of a St. Patrick's Day

By Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. What's this about Texas "folkabilly" singer/composer Nanci Griffith giving up on the United States?

A. She has moved to Ireland, where she is almost as popular as the Irish band U2. Griffith, whose eighth album, "Storms," has more pop sheen than her previous records, particularly likes British and European radio formats, where "back to back, you could hear U2 and Nanci Griffith and the Everly Brothers," she notes. "Country radio has become almost like Muzak in the U.S.," she says. "It has nothing to do with country music. I think they thought of me as a folk artist, so therefore I didn't belong in country music."

DINA MERRILL
She's bicoastal social

Q. For an actor who looks like he ought to play a pit bull, why does Bob Hoskins frequently go for the vulnerable role?

A. "I usually find that butch men are at their best when they're at their weakest," the British screen star says about his latest role as an American in "Heart Condition." The theme runs through his other films, including "Mona Lisa." "I've learned most of my trade from women," he says. "Women can express far more vulnerability ... women can make you know what they're thinking or what they're feeling very quickly. ... And to be an actor, that's what you've got to do. So I suppose a real hero is the guy who's the most vulnerable. ... And I love working with women."

Q. What is Dina Merrill, the beautiful actress, up to?

A. Merrill, 64, remains active in the bicoastal social swim, a familiar life since she grew up as the daughter of socialite Marjorie Merriweather Post. Merrill has, however, kept a low profile professionally. After her split from actor Cliff Robertson five years ago, she married Hollywood movie executive Ted Hartley.

RICHARD GERE
Buddhism suits him

Q. How has Buddhism affected Richard Gere's career?

A. Gere is happily back in the Hollywood swing, and it may be due in part to his beliefs. Since the early '70s, he has studied Buddhism, especially the Tibetan School, and one of its spiritual teachings holds that creativity depends upon "withdraw and return" — a pattern that certainly characterizes the 40-year-old actor's career. After some uneven film successes in the '80s, he's back with two new films, "3,000" and "Internal Affairs." And through Gere Productions, he is developing some offbeat projects, including "Imagining Argentina," from Lawrence Thornton's acclaimed surreal novel.

'Erasure' won't erase this one

By Knight-Ridder News Service

Keyboard whiz Vince Clarke, 29, and singer Andy Bell are the British techno-rock duo Erasure.

The rock singers are now touring in order to promote their new album. The name of the album is "Wild."

ON "WILD": "What we firstly decided was that we were going to have a laugh, not be quite as serious."

"In order to please our whims this time, we decided to record separately."

"We wrote the songs together, and then I went into one studio to do the music, and (Bell) went into another to do the singing."

"It was a lot freer — I wasn't over Andy's shoulder, saying what he should sing, and he wasn't over my shoulder watching me push buttons on a computer."

ON ROY ORBISON: "Blue Savannah," one of the songs on "Wild," became a tribute of sorts.

"When we worked on the melody and the chord structure and the arrangement, it sounded like something Roy Orbison would sing."

ON THE GROUP: Clarke, a veteran of the British groups Depeche Mode and Yazoo, says the duo plans to stay together for quite some time.

"I'm very happy."

"We've got ideas already for the next set of recordings, and we haven't run out of ideas yet. It's the attitude really."

"As you learn to work together, you learn to live with each other and appreciate what you each can do."

"It's all down to trusting each other on what each other does."

Penny's new film's under way

In 1977, she co-starred on the hit TV sitcom "Laverne and Shirley."

Marshall is currently directing Robin Williams and Robert De Niro in "Awakenings." The film is due to be released in the fall of 1990.

These Mack trucks had some genuine personality

Mack has been building trucks of all kinds and sizes since the beginning of this century; but the

Car Stories

Mack we old timers remember with the most affection is the original Bulldog Mack with the big, slanted, tapered hood and the massive frame. It looked like the ultimate in strength and reliability. Even the name was macho: "Bulldog" and "Mack" reminded us that those trucks were driven by strong men who were doing heavy work. The Bulldog Mack was so ugly it was beautiful. That big brute was made for tough jobs. Mack later applied the Bulldog name to other trucks, but here I am just talking about the original Bulldog Mack.

The location of the radiator just under the windshield (not all of them even had windshields in the early days) gave the designers a chance to make the hood any shape they wanted; it did not have to conform to the shape of a flat radiator up in front. There have been several cars and trucks with slanted fronts; but the distinctive Bulldog Mack hood was designed to look rough, tough and capable. That image was backed up by the facts, as was the slogan "Built Like a Mack Truck," which probably started as a slang phrase applied to anybody who was solidly built.

The original Bulldog Mack was built from 1914 to 1938 and its chassis did not change in its general layout from year to year. Most early trucks had open cabs, chain drive and solid rubber tires; and so did the Mack. The big four-cylinder engine of the Mack could lug down to a speed slower than the idling speed of a modern car engine, while still putting out a lot of power. Those pistons were five inches across. Speed was not important; the Mack could truck along at 20 miles an hour. In later years, you could have your Mack equipped with pneumatic tires, a windshield, side windows and other luxurious fittings.

Chain drive was standard on the Mack. The heavy differential and rear axle assembly were bolted to the frame. A sprocket at the end of each axle's shaft drove (through a heavy chain) a corresponding sprocket attached to each rear wheel. The gear ratio could be changed by changing sprockets. If anything broke in heavy going, it was likely to be the chain – which was easier to get at and fix than the enclosed axle assembly. Keeping the chains lubricated in dust and mud was difficult.

Mack made most of their own parts, and Mack quality was not cheap. In spite of their high prices, thousands of Bulldog Macks were used for heavy hauling all over the world. They were built in several capacity ranges from three to seven tons and could haul even more with a trailer and semi-trailer. The Bulldog Mack had a personality all its own, and we will never forget it.

Aurora Concept is radical departure

No longer merely an American, European or Japanese market, today's luxury cars must compete in the global marketplace.

A car designed in Europe or the Far East may often find its greatest acceptance in the United States.

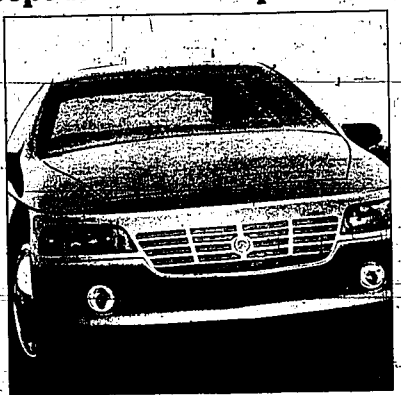

For Cadillac, Aurora not only represents a radical departure from current-design Cadillacs, but a vehicle that is engineered and designed to compete aggressively in the world market for luxury cars.

"This is a very serious effort to showcase present and future technology of Cadillac," says John Grettenberger, General Motors vice president and general manager of Cadillac.

"Aurora is designed to be much more than an auto show attraction."

Some of the features incorporated into the Aurora, such as Traction-Control, the 4.5-liter SPFI engine and electronically adjustable struts, are already used in selected Cadillac models."

Other features, including all-wheel drive, four-passenger inflatable restraints and a sunroof that the driver can adjust automatically to darken, could easily be adapted into future Cadillacs.

It's a concept of a car

"Two years ago, when we introduced our Voyage concept car, hardly anyone took the traction-control system seriously," Grettenberger says. "Today, it's an award-winning component on our Allante."

Care for a diskette?

Personal computer operators now can play video games and shop for new 1990-model Ford Motor Company cars and light trucks at the same time — in the convenience and comfort of their homes.

The new Ford Simulator II diskette allows PC users to play three different and exciting road games and get the facts on any Ford and Lincoln Mercury car and Ford light truck offered in the market.

The Ford Simulator II puts PC users behind the wheel of the vehicle and creates a challenging driving experience.

This simulator demonstrates key features in 1990 Ford vehicles. It does this in an educational and entertaining fashion.

PC users can take to the road with the Ford Simulator II in three thrilling driving simulations, each with three levels of difficulty.

In the TEST TRACK, they challenge their driving skills on a choice of a drag strip, a track inundated with tight turns, or an obstacle course of pylons.

In the CITY CHALLENGE, they wind their way through traffic toward a choice of destinations: downtown, a shopping mall, or the airport.

With BACK ROADS, the user can choose an easy-going byway, a twisting blacktop, or a two-lane road that requires maneuvering around slow-moving traffic.

The 1990 Ford Simulator II diskette is available in three formats: IBM compatible 3½ or 5¼ or Macintosh 3½.

They require an IBM or compatible PC with at least 512K and CGA color graphics or a Macintosh 512K, Plus or DE (800K).

Cost is $6.95 (including shipping and handling).

These Ford Simulator II diskettes can be ordered by calling 1-800-462-4356.

You may also obtain one of the diskettes by writing to the following address: Ford Simulator II, 14310 Hamilton Ave., Highland Park, Mich. 48203.

Don't lose your luggage, kids or glasses

Ever own an Aston?

By JIM MATEJA
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — If you plunked down a mere $10,000 in 1980 to purchase a 1957 Aston Martin DB5 roadster, you'd now be sitting at the wheel of an investment worth $250,000.

That's a 2,400 percent return on your investment over a decade.

If you had a bit more daring and a lot more money, and had bought a 1968-73 Ferrari 365 GTB Daytona Spyder in 1980 for $27,500, you'd now be the proud owner of a car worth $1.2 million. That's a 4,263 percent increase in one decade. And you felt guilty forking over $5 for your latest lottery tickets?

The Aston Martin and Ferrari are but two of the cars on Mitchell Kruse's "Top 40" list of collector vehicles, machines that appreciated the most in value during the 1980s.

Kruse, president of Kruse International, the Auburn, Ind., auction house, said he compiled the Top 40 based on auction results as well as private offers and sales at the beginning and end of the decade. "We wanted to prove collector cars are among the strongest investments available," said Kruse, who along with his father, Dean, auctioned 12,000 collector cars worth more than $350 million at 40 events last year. "The collector car market is really in its infancy," he said. "The automobile is only 100 years old. In comparison to paintings that sell for more than $40 million, that's quite young.

However, Kruse points out a downside that makes the investment in a collector car as risky as buying a bottle of fine wine that could turn to vinegar. "Why did the cars on the Top 40 list appreciate the most? There were five factors," he said:

—Rarity — How many were built? Low production numbers increase value.

—Condition — The cars are fully restored and in excellent condition, never rust buckets in need of a paint job.

—Horsepower — The bigger the engine, the more money a car brings. Nearly every Top 40 car has a V-8 or larger engine.

—Design — A car must be appealing to the eye. A rule of thumb is that when the top goes down, the price goes up. Of the Top 40, 30 are convertibles.

—Historical significance — This is the effect a car had on the market after it was produced. Some radical cars of their era in the Top 40 include the AC Cobra, 1953 Corvette, 1957 Chevrolet Bel Air convertible and '55-57 Mercedes-Benz gull-wing model.

One of the biggest risks is restoration, the time and cost it takes to bring the car back to perfect condition, not only in appearance but also in the equipment that came with the vehicle when it was new. "This is why we recommend you buy a car fully restored rather than buy one and attempt to have it restored yourself," Kruse said.

"You easily can spend as much, if not more, to restore a car as it's actually worth."

Mormon Meteor may move to Salt Lake

ST. GEORGE, Utah (AP) — The Mormon Meteor III, the world record-setting race car for years parked in the state Capitol, may be getting another home if the family of famed racer Ab Jenkins get their way.

Jenkins's survivors are upset at the treatment of the race car, which apparently has suffered greatly from disrepair and vandalism while on display at the Capitol. Now the area it occupies is about to be swallowed up by expanding offices.

Marvin Jenkins, son of the late racer and Salt Lake mayor, said the 52-year-old car might be refurbished and he's negotiating with state officials to move the vehicle to the Union Pacific Depot in downtown Salt Lake City. The car has been in state hands since 1943.

Jenkins said he plans to move the car temporarily to his home in St. George where some restoration work will begin. He said its tattered body will be sent to race-car building Quinn Epperly in Los Angeles for refurbishing.

The Mormon Meteor III was the last of the record breakers that Jenkins drove between 1931 and 1950.

Finally, utility vehicles offer room to step down

By AL HAAS
Knight-Ridder News Service

Compact sport/utility vehicles, those rugged four-wheel-drivers that are at home on or off the road, are the hottest sellers in the automobile business at the moment.

Their popularity is largely attributable to a growing appreciation of their traction on slippery roads and their sporty looks. Because many of their buyers are people with expanding families, almost all of their recent sales growth has been in four-door models.

But until the 1990 model year, only three of these wagonlike vehicles were available with four doors — the Jeep Cherokee, the Isuzu Trooper and the Mitsubishi Montero (which was first offered in 1989). Other manufacturers have been scrambling to add four-door versions to their sport-utility repertoires. The latest additions are the GMC S-15 Jimmy and its twin, the Chevrolet S-10 Blazer.

Four doors are a particular advantage on sport utilities like the S-15 Jimmy and S-10 Blazer because the vehicles sit so high. The usual discomfort associated with extricating yourself from the back seat of a pleasure car is compounded in a sport/utility by that big step to the ground.

As it turns out, the GMC and Chevy four-door offerings — 1991 models coming on the market this month — offer a lot more than two more doors. They are roomier than their two-door counterparts, more heavily equipped — and more expensive. At $17,291, the four-door Jimmy that I tested is about $2,000 more than the two-door model.

The additional passenger and cargo space afforded by the four-door Jimmy is dramatic. The four-door model provides 15 more inches of rear seat hip room than its two-door counterpart.

Head to the waterfalls

Travel

Idaho waterfalls are particular favorites among tourists from both near and far. There are several of these waterfalls in Idaho.

The Shoshone Falls in Southwestern Idaho roar over a spectacular 212-foot drop and has earned the nickname "Niagara of the West." The falls are only five miles from downtown Twin Falls on U.S. Highway 93.

Upper and Lower Mesa Falls in Eastern Idaho are another must-see. The roar of these falls are the don't-miss features of the Henry's Fork of the Snake River. Both sets of falls can be seen just off Highway 47.

Moyie Falls in Northern Idaho are on the Moyie River and can be viewed by turning off U.S. Highway 2 a short distance north of Bonners Ferry. Visitors can walk above the cascades and get a bird's-eye view of the waterfall.

Time to think about making a splash

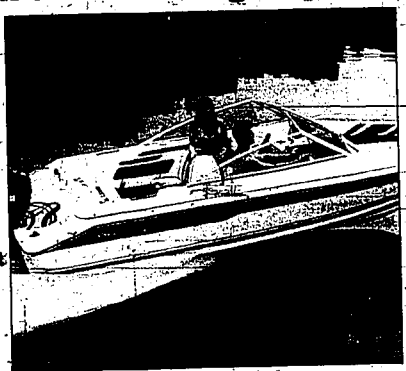

With a Sea Ray hull designed to enhance outboard performance, and a large V6 engine, this versatile bowrider is a match for competing 18-foot sterndrives.

Although a clearly discernible step up in cockpit size, storage and general roominess from the 16-foot outboard, the 180 Bow Rider Outboard remains in the ideal size range for maneuverability and easy handling.

Planing is faster and performance far more engaging with this model.

Laminates and other materials carefully layered, monitored and cured result in a hull that is sound beyond all standards for boats this size.

Combining these advantages with a unity of built-for-sea components, this Sea Ray elevates the popular perception of how solid and smooth-riding an 18-foot outboard can be.

The Bow Rider is ready to ride

With all the standard and optional features, the 180 Bow Rider is one of the best equipped 18-foot outboards on the market. Standard seating is comprised of bucket helm, back-to-back companion lounger, and comfortable bench aft.

Options include U-shaped seating that converts to a sun lounger.

The Fish & Ski Package is also available.

Sea Ray calls this model one of the best equipped, best performing, best built outboards in this popular size.

Sea Ray is beginning its fourth decade of building sport boats.

You don't have to be daffy about daffodils to go to the Daffodil Festival, but it sure helps

Daffodil-laden floats, some with as many as 90,000 yellow blossoms, begin the journey of the Daffodil Festival Grand Floral Parade on Sat., April 7.

This crowd-pleasing four-city parade commences at 10 a.m. in downtown Tacoma, 1 p.m. in downtown Puyallup, 2:30 p.m. in Sumner and 5 p.m. in Orting.

Approximately 130 parade units and over 150,000 spectators join together for the celebration of spring procession.

Floats will be decorated highlighting this year's theme, "Puget Sound on Parade."

Many of the blooms come from the Puyallup Valley.

Innumerable volunteers work through the night decorating the floats with fresh flowers to achieve the stunning results in this mobile floral spectacular.

LONDON (AP) — A modern Scottish museum had to fake a fish with fur to satisfy public demand.

This is among 600 objects in a British Museum exhibition that displays 3,000 years of the forger's art and suggests that fakes often reflect what people want to believe.

The exhibition "Fake? The Art of Deception," running through Sept. 2, contains fake jewels, coins, sculptures, fossils, furniture and porcelain.

There's even a letter purporting to have been written by Jesus Christ. Director Sir David M. Wilson admits:

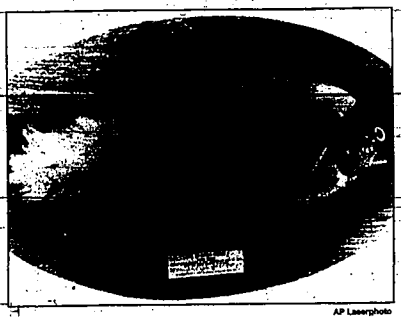

"There is a horrid fascination about fakes. Although we sweep them under the carpet, we talk about them all the time because we know we as experts are fallible."

But what of the furry trout?

A Scotsman wrote home from Canada in the 17th century about the abundance of "furried animals and fish." Asked to provide an example of furry fish he obliged — and a modern Canadian is still at it, putting rabbit fur on stuffed trout, with a text saying fish in great depths and penetrating cold grow a dense coat of protective fur.

"One of these fish was brought to us by someone who thought it was genuine," said Geoffrey Swinney of the Royal Museum of Scotland.

"We said it was a hoax and sent him away but the story had got out and public demand to see the furry fish was so strong that we had to make one — a fake twice over."

Been thinking about buying a camper this year?

By News USA

Whether your idea of camping is basic shelter or a top-of-the-line luxury lodge on wheels, the recreation vehicle (RV) industry offers a corresponding product.

Towable RV's can be unhitched at a campsite, freeing the tow vehicle for errands or sidetrips. Motorized RV's combine driving and living facilities in one convenient package. Either type is available with all the comforts of home: power, heat, air conditioning, running water, kitchen appliances, cozy interior furnishings and even entertainment systems.

A folding camping trailer, sleeping up to eight, might cost $2,000 to $9,000, while a truck camper that can be loaded onto or affixed to the bed or chassis of a pickup, sleeping six, will run $2,999 to $13,500.

A motorhome for up to 10 comes in three types: mini-motorhome, conventional and van, and averages $23,500 to $55,200. A travel trailer sleeps up to eight, is hard-sided and can be towed by a car, truck or van. Fifth wheel models hitch to truck beds for two-level floor plans. Motorhomes run anywhere from $4,000 to $50,000.

A van conversion, manufactured by an automaker then modified by a specialized company for greater comfort and style, seats up to 12 and sleeps up to four. This will run you $16,500 to $40,000.

Forget the horror stories and make your gown

Sewing Etc.

Donna Salyers

When Today co-host Deborah Norville got married, she chose to make the bridesmaid dresses, and even the flower girl's dress. As for her own dress . . . no way — she had heard too many horror stories about brides still sewing on beads on the way to the church. How about you? Did you sew your own wedding gown? Would you do it again? We'll compile a collection of bridal tips and tales for a future column. Meantime, here's one bride's story.

Bonnie Cichowlas Purnhagen of Cincinnati says, after a moment's hesitation, that yes, she would make her own bridal gown if she could do it again. There are a few things, however, she might do differently. Nothing about the glorious dress worn in her pre-Christmas wedding would she change. Indeed, there are wedding gowns and there are wedding gowns such as Bonnie's.

When Lawrence and Rita Cichowlas, Bonnie's parents were married 40 years ago, the bride sewed her own dress, and Bonnie wanted to continue the tradition. "The Dress" began with a Spring shopping trip to New York for Bonnie and her mother. After Bonnie tried on dress after dress, they spent three days in the garment district shopping for fabric, laces and trims.

An administrative specialist for IBM, and a graduate in Home Economics with a great deal of experience in textiles and sewing, Bonnie was confident enough in her skills to combine components from three different bridal patterns to design the dress she visualized. The fitted bodice has a high beaded neckline and lots of heavily beaded lace. The beaded lace sleeves, full at the top and fitted below the elbow, close with countless tiny satin-covered buttons. The hem of the extra full skirt is finished with a border of beaded lace medallions and flows into a long train that can be hooked at the waist to form a bustle. The back of the dress closes with nearly 50 buttons (Bonnie recommends purchasing covered buttons as opposed to covering buttons yourself).

Is there a wedding in your future? Bonnie offers this advice:

START EARLY! Though Bonnie began working on her dress about five months before the big day, and though she worked on it nearly every evening during the last three months, the gown was finished only a few days before the formal photos were scheduled. Attaching nearly one hundred lace appliques by hand takes time, not to mention the sewing of 6,600 beads, also by hand. Finishing just a bit ahead of schedule is the one thing Bonnie — and her mother, would have preferred.

MAKE A MUSLIN Work out fitting problems on a test muslin. In fitting, wear the same under garments and shoes you plan to wear on the big day. Incidental changes such as wearing a fuller crinoline or lower heels can make a big difference.

MAKE AN HEIRLOOM It was Bonnie's intention to create the finest gown possible. Though many discerning seamstresses consider it perfectly acceptable to use glue and machine stitching in securing beads and lace appliques, Bonnie chose to do it all by hand. To enhance the traditional value of the dress, her mother embroidered names and the wedding date on a scrap of the bridal satin and stitched it to the underside of the skirt.

THEY DON'T COME CHEAP! Prepare yourself for $3,000-$5,000 price tags on wedding gowns in ready-to-wear. Though Bonnie spent nearly $1,000 on the fabric and laces that went in to her gown, when the dress she created is compared with a similar gown she might have purchased, she actually saved thousands.

THERE ARE SHORTCUTS Though Bonnie did the majority of the work, her mother helped. As an avid quilter, it was Rita who thought of using a cardboard template, similar to those quilters use, in preparing the hem for the addition of the lace medallions. After marking and cutting the hem to what looked like exaggerated scallops, the entire scalloped hem edge was serged. The resulting hem had a durable clean finished edge, ready for the addition of the lace medallions.

KEEPSAKE FLOWERS Bonnie and her mother came up with a clever idea for making keepsake satin roses to hand to each member of the congregation as they entered the church. Space doesn't allow for the how-to here, but if you'd like to receive those instructions by mail, please send a long self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Bridal Keepsake, P. O. Box 40425, Cincinnati, OH 45240.

Do you ever feel like pushing spring's arrival a little bit?

By ART KOZELKA
Chicago Tribune

Gardening

CHICAGO — When winter seems to drag on, there are two sure ways the magic of spring can dispel the doldrums. One is to play a prank on nature by forcing some stems and branches snipped from garden shrubs and trees into early indoor bloom.

Almost every yard has some woody subjects that lend themselves to this forcing technique. Some may respond quicker than others, depending on variety and state of dormancy. Generally, the nearer a plant is to its normal outdoor flowering time, the sooner it can be forced indoors.

Cuttings taken now from forsythia, for example, may not show their golden bells for three weeks, but they will in less time if taken in March.

In any event, you can enjoy a succession of fresh blossoms by cutting and forcing some every few weeks. In addition to forsythia and quince, pussy willows, spicebush, almond, saucer magnolia, cornelian cherry, honeysuckle and spirea, especially the double-flowering kind, are the easiest and earliest to force into bloom.

Branches from peach, cherry, crabapple, pear and redbud trees require more time, but don't be impatient with these, because their blossoms are well worth the wait. Collect stems and branches on mild days so they can be selected carefully and without haste.

Choose those that have the most flower buds, which are more plump and rounder than the leaf buds. Interestingly, some will open both leaf and blossom buds simultaneously when forced.

Use sharp pruning shears to make clean cuts just above side buds or nodes, retaining the natural symmetry of each plant or tree, just as in normal pruning. Cuttings should be long enough to make a graceful array of blooms when placed in containers.

Once the stems are brought indoors, peel back some of the bark or slit open the cut ends 1 or 2 inches to facilitate water absorption, then submerge them full length in a tub of room-temperature water overnight.

Thoroughly moistening them this way will loosen bud scales and help them open and fall off. It also will allow the stems to thaw gradually and prevent buds from bursting open prematurely if the cuttings were taken when temperatures were below freezing.

The day after stems have been soaked, stand them (cut ends down) in a deep container of tepid water and keep the container in a cool, humid place with moderate light for a day or so.

This step will allow the cuttings to slowly adjust to room temperatures and prepare them for arranging.

—Place containers in bright light, but avoid direct sunlight, which could dry out buds before they fully open.

—Turn containers every other day so light is evenly distributed among the stems and branches.

—If buds seem slow to open, mist-spray the cuttings occasionally with warm water.

For "instant" spring, efforts indoors; treat yourself to pots of flowering bulbs and other blooming plants available now at floral markets. In addition to daffodils, tulips, crocuses, snowdrops and hyacinths, you'll find multicolored—azaleas, cinerarias, primulas, cyclamens, kalanchoes and others that flaunt the message of spring.

Knowing a few simple facts about florists and wire services can make purchasing flowers for local or out-of-town delivery an enjoyable and rewarding experience for both the sender and the recipient

Choosing the right florist is key to sending beautiful floral gifts, according to "Florists' Transworld Delivery Association (FTD), the oldest and largest flowers-by-wire service. To help select-a-florist who can satisfy your local as well as out-of-town floral needs, FTD offers these suggestions:

The right florist is more than someone who sells flowers. He or she should provide information or advice on what's new in floral design, what the best buys are at different times of year, appropriate selections for certain occasions and proper care for flowers and plants.

Other things to look for are the products and services offered by a florist. A good selection of cut flowers, flowering and green plants and attractive floral arrangements are a sign of a quality florist. But it's also important to choose a shop which fits your personal needs.

Are the hours of operation and methods of payment convenient? Does the shop stand behind its work and make adjustments if problems arise?

Delivery is another factor to consider, especially when sending flowers to distant cities. If you send orders out-of-town, you'll want to select a florist who can send floral orders by wire, through a service like FTD.

Sending flowers-by-wire has been available since the founding of FTD in 1910, but some people are still unsure of how to use the service.

Finding a florist you know and trust is essential when sending floral gifts out-of-town. With a reputable florist, you know your order will be sent by telephone or computer to a second florist in a distant city who will deliver your floral gift from the fresh, local supplies in his or her shop.

Flowers-by-wire can be sent in as little as a day or two before an occasion, but placing an order in advance is advised, especially before holidays when the demand for flowers and plants is so great. If specific flowers or colors are preferred, it's important to give the florist alternate selections.

When sending floral gifts out-of-town, always provide the florist with the complete name, address and telephone number of the person who is to receive the order.

Many florists offer flowers-by-wire, but only FTD florists are checked regularly through a comprehensive quality control "test order" program. Orders are placed by professional shoppers, and the floral gifts are intercepted, inspected and judged for freshness, design quality, value and timely delivery.

Please do feed the hungry avians

By DEBORAH LAWSON
Knight-Ridder News Service

Feeding wild birds is a simple, relatively inexpensive activity that can provide a good measure of entertainment and satisfaction.

Although many people feed birds, particularly in the winter, information on the subject has been hard to come by. And until the National Bird-Feeding Society was established recently, there was no group dedicated to the activity.

"We felt that people who feed avians need much more advice and support in order to make the pursuit rewarding to them and beneficial to all varieties of birds," said the society's executive director, Ralph Wells, who was interviewed by telephone from his Northbrook, Ill., home. "Another goal is to fund research on the housing and feeding of songbirds."

There currently are about 500 members of the society. For a $15 annual fee, society members receive a quarterly newsletter adapted to their region of the country.

Typical topics are how to keep cats and squirrels away from feeders, the types of feeders and foods that attract particular sorts of birds, where to position feeders and the building of birdhouses.

Members also receive a window decal, a bumper sticker and a beverage mug with the society's symbol. For information, write to the National Bird-Feeding Society, 1163 Shermer Rd., Northbrook, Ill. 60062.

Although start-up funds for the society came from the Wild Bird Feeding Institute, a small group of bird food producers, the club is an independent, non-profit and public service organization.

Here's your chance to call that official a bum

A READER ASKS: What's the fastest way for officials to lose control of the game?

Mark Aguirre, Forward, Detroit Pistons: Officials who get into direct confrontations with players or coaches usually lose control over what's happening on the floor.

Randolph Keys, Forward, Cleveland Cavaliers: Games become messy when refs are caught up in the home-court situation. They shouldn't call something a foul at one end of the court and let it go at the other end.

Mike Gminski, Center, Philadelphia 76ers: Inconsistency in play-calling always leads to confusion. Confusion causes players and fans to get out of hand.

Richard Anderson, Forward, Charlotte Hornets: If the officials start calling a bunch of fouls on the home team, you'll see a sloppy game — and a lot of arguing.

Dell Curry, Guard, Charlotte Hornets: Refs give up control when they let the players dictate the action. Players quickly take charge when they're allowed to be too aggressive or too physical.

Frank Brickowksi, Center, San Antonio Spurs: There's a problem on the court anytime a ref makes a call because he's gotten into it personally with a player.

Danny Manning, Forward, Los Angeles Clippers: The refs are in for a long night if they don't call that first foul, especially if the action is too physical on the inside.

Bill Laimbeer says 'bad flow' can be a big problem

Will Perdue, Center, Chicago Bulls: Once the players realize fouls aren't being called, the game will become very physical. But, then, both teams will play angry if the refs change their philosophy and start calling fouls.

Pervis Ellison, Center, Sacramento Kings: If the officials are tightly controlling the game in the beginning — with touch fouls being called — but aren't calling it closely toward the end, the players will react to their new freedom. And it's going to be rough out on the court.

Is it a hockey game, or is it a remake of 'West Side Story'?

By BARRY LORGE
Copley News Service

Reading about the gang rumble that passed for a recent National Hockey League game in Inglewood, Calif., I thought about how such sorry spectacles sadden purists such as Mordecai Richler.

The Canadian author, whose novels include "The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz" and the forthcoming "Solomon Gursky Was Here," has written some outstanding hockey stories. Born in 1931, he grew up in Montreal in the days of the six-team NHL, revering the game before it spawned specialists in thuggery.

Reminiscing one day in 1981, he told me he seldom sees the sort of hockey that made him tingle in his youth, except in international competition. That struck him during the first Soviet-Canada challenge series in 1972.

"The way the Russians skated and passed the puck and set up plays reminded people of the way the NHL used to be, before expansion diluted it and the goons took over and muscle became more important than finesse," he said. "We used to go to hockey games and come away drained, exhausted, so thrilling was the action. The quality is not what it was, and if you love hockey, that's sad.

"I think the corruption really started with the curved sticks and the slap shot, which is really a mindless kind of thing. Somebody shoots the puck a million miles an hour, and everybody gasps, but it usually hits the glass instead of the net."

Goalies had to put on masks because everybody shot harder, and less accurately. Instead of wrist shots and elegant passes and tic-tac-toe, move the puck around and set up a play, everybody just started dumping the puck in the zone and firing away randomly and fighting, trying to win with muscle and intimidation rather than strategy. It's a very choppy and mundane game now, by comparison."

Nearly a decade later, notes another aficionado, former St. Louis Blues owner Harry Ornest, "All the players are wearing eye shields and helmets and they look like men from Mars." That doesn't make the sport better than on those rare international occasions when there is no need for futuristic gear to protect players from punches.

"A year ago last September, in the Canada Cup series, there were marvelous games," recalled Ornest, a native of Edmonton who now owns the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League.

"There was heavy body checking, but no fighting because nobody wanted a penalty. You don't want to make it the Ice Capades, but you don't need the fighting.

If the Russians and the best NHL players can play great, intense hockey against each other and never have a fight, then why can't they do it in NHL games? Then the onus must be on the league, isn't it?"

Yes. But although NHL officials claim they want to reduce blood on the ice, and have ostensibly legislated toward that end, they have done little to get rid of the hired "enforcers."

"They have done everything short of outlawing fighting," Ornest said, "but every team is dressing goons who can't play ... What is illegal in every other sport is tolerated in hockey."

An NHL record 86 penalties, totaling 356 minutes, were assessed in the Los Angeles Kings' 4-2 victory over the Edmonton Oilers. The teams were sent to the dressing room with 3:22 remaining in the second period to cool off, but that didn't help this bloody mess.

By the end of the carnage, Kings right winger Tomas Sanstrom was lost indefinitely with a broken bone near his right eye and a severe cut, and teammate Marty McSorley was suspended for three games after receiving his fourth and fifth game misconduct penalties of the season.

What if you would rather be a couch potato?

Ask Dr. Ruth

Dr. Ruth Westheimer

Q. Of late years my wife and I have sex less than we used to. You could fairly say that we are less sexy. We like a pat, a fond kiss, sitting close together like real chummy couch potatoes. Sex? Yeah, well, that's now and then. This seems to be enough. I never dreamed we would be like this, back when we were newly married. So, Dr. Ruth, are we under arrest if we don't ring up a sex therapist?

A. I won't hand your name in to the sex authorities. I am burning your letter now. But don't go writing to every sex maven you see in the papers. Seriously, only those who ask for it get attention from the sexperts. We do not need to round up people who fall behind in married sex. It is up to them. And there are volunteers aplenty.

I never said to do whatever feels good. This is what I am supposed to have advocated, although I never did. But I would say, don't do something out of a sense of obligation to the rules laid down by some school of sex, or by the fashion of the era. When either you or your dear companion is feeling deprived, it is time to think about raising the sexual content of your marriage. When one partner is sexually discontented, the other really should pay attention. And the discontented one should not be silent.

Nobody has to do anything he or she doesn't like doing, but in the interest of preserving a good marriage or relationship, attention has to be given to the sex. In the best marriage I ever heard of, at some time one partner or the other had to think somewhat dutifully about the sex. Maybe you prefer the word "responsibly."

I get a nice warm feeling about the marriage you describe. Whose business is it but yours how you please yourselves alone together? But to give a little advice, take it as from a friendly source and not bullying, it often happens that one partner is feeling a little deprived sexually and not saying so. There is still plenty of shyness about asking for more sex. You may think the whole world is ready to get on TV and talk about the most personal things without shame or decency, but the fact is that there is still plenty of reticence around, and it is not always helpful to sexual relationships.

Maybe your wife is feeling just a little bit wistful about the sexual menu at your house. But not saying. As one chummy couch potato to another, you could ask her if this is so. Or you could show her this column, saying, "This couple sounds like us." She doesn't have to know you wrote me about this.

Parent fears drug abuse

By EVELYN PETERSEN
Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. What signs or symptoms should a parent look for if he or she suspects a teen of substance abuse? — A.D.

A. Much depends on the type of substance being abused. For specific information, check with your local health department, schools and other agencies.

The most important thing to watch for is an unusual change in your child's behavior.

Alcohol is the most common gateway drug being used today. Watch for lowered levels in bottles of alcohol at home and for frequent use of breath fresheners.

Amphetamines ("speed," "bennies," "crystal") are stimulants that come in capsules and tablets. Watch for signs of insomnia, loss of appetite, depression and paranoia.

Cocaine ("coke") is a white, bitter powder that can be injected, smoked or snorted. Watch for mood swings, depression, paranoia, nausea and a combination of fatigue and insomnia.

Crack is powdered cocaine mixed with baking soda and water to form a white paste that hardens when heated to look like off-white rock salt. Watch for changes from euphoria to depression and increased frustration.

Inhalants — often such common items as glue, gasoline or paint thinner — may cause sudden death, respiratory depression and severe psychological or brain damage. Watch for containers of common household items in inappropriate places.

PCP ("angel dust") is a hallucinogen that can be swallowed, smoked, sniffed or injected. Watch for emotional imbalance and dreamlike, psychotic or catatonic states and more common injuries and accidents.

Is the game X-rated?

By ROBERT MUSIAL
Knight-Ridder News Service

"The lights are low and the stakes are high — you're trying to rekindle your romance with a roll of a die. You move your token and draw a card that reads: "Toast your partner by dabbing whatever you're drinking on his/her body and tasting it."

Why you love this person is beginning to come back to you . . .

Which is precisely the point of "An Enchanted Evening" — the board game that's never boring. Since 1988, a mini-boom has hit the market of relationship and romance. Creators of games such as An Enchanted Evening say couples from all ages, income groups and sexual preferences have snapped up their games, eager to transform their low-watt love affairs into the blazing lights of Broadway. And maybe have some wicked fun along the way.

Over 200,000 copies of An Enchanted Evening have been sold, said Barbara Jonas of San Francisco, the game's inventor. "It's a game for two people who love each other and would like to stay that way," said Jonas, a former Peace Corps volunteer who created the game for her husband, Michael, in 1979.

After an argument, he left on a business trip. With him due back on New Year's Eve, she was determined to start the year off right. Using a handful of index cards and colored pens, she sat down and created the first version of the game. It worked. "It was like falling in love all over again," she said. When friends and relatives tried the game and raved about it, the Jonases figured they were on to something and decided to market the game. Priced around $26, the game comes in a plum-colored, book-sized box, complete with a soft-focus cover shot of roses, raspberries and elegant candies.

But, warn some therapists, proceed with caution, not every relationship can stand the strain of total honesty — even in game form. Still, Jane Weaver of Dayton, Ohio, is marriage counselor who believes that An Enchanted Evening can add some spice to a spouse. "People forget that all the energy they built during courting needs to be kept up. An Enchanted Evening can help them dream together again," said Weaver. As part of a marriage encounter weekend, Weaver plans to take 10 couples to a hotel. In each room will be the game.

For those who'd like to try this on their own, the Troy Hilton, located in Troy, Mich., is planning to offer a similar weekend later this month — sans counselor — for $159 a couple. Besides the game and the room, the price includes dinner for two, breakfast in bed, such goodies as dessert truffles and chilled champagne in the room and special heart-shaped bath soaps.

Snappy dresser

John Branson, principal of Anthoney Wayne Elementary School in Franklin, Ohio, kicks up his heels on the school's roof and makes good on a bet he made with the students at the school to dress up like a woman and spend a day on the roof if they read 3,500 books during this month's Right to Read Week. They read more than 6,000, so Branson moved desks, a phone and plenty of paperwork to the roof.

Her ashes could be on some mantel

CANTON, Ohio — This is the story of a woman who lost her dead mother's ashes when a storage company auctioned off the urn.

The storage firm claimed the woman hadn't paid rent. Sheila Heckman of Canton says she did. Now, for all Heckman knows, her mother's ashes could be anywhere, the urn containing them sitting on top of a living room mantel.

Heckman's lawyer says the storage company also sold or disposed of thousands of dollars in irreplaceable family heirlooms and antiques.

But Heckman isn't taking this without a fight. Her lawyer, Donald C. Steiner, filed a lawsuit on her behalf this week in Stark County Common Pleas Court. It asks that a jury award her money for the value of the items, punitive damages and damages for emotional distress.

The manager of A-1 Store-it-All said that auctions are held all the time at the facility when people have late accounts. "We're not here to hold people's stuff while they roam the country," said Pearl Cline, who said she figures Heckman was a couple of months behind in making her $38-a-month payments. Pearl Cline said she co-manages the storage business with her husband, William.

She said Heckman "threw such a fit with us and called me all kinds of names after the auction. What did she expect? This is not a goodwill service, this is a business."

Toddler cruising — not the latest craze

GOSHEN, Ohio (AP) — Lots of kids like to take their wheels and go cruising late at night, but they usually start at a later age than Candy Lewis' 3-year-old son.

Police officer Jeff Lacey said he was riding on patrol at 3:45 a.m. recently in the rural southwestern Ohio community when he spotted the boy riding his tricycle.

The tyke, who was not identified, had gotten up, dressed himself and pushed a wooden table against the front door of his mobile home so he could reach the latch and let himself out, Lacey said.

"He was just riding around," the officer said. "He'd been down a couple of streets and had gotten lost."

Lacey took the boy back to the police station.

A few hours later, a panicked Ms. Lewis telephoned police to report that her child was gone when she awoke.

Police promptly reunited the boy with his mother. They did not release his name.

BARROOM PHILOSOPHER
By Swede Eddy

Ya got to agree that drug abuse,
Drinkin' and smokin' too,
Are an awful problem,
And just to give a clue,
It's a big cause of heart attacks,
The percentage is really high,
Not to mention car accidents,
A feller can't see why.
Then there's these kids,
A runnin' in a pack,
Havin' their gang wars,
Smokin' pot and takin' crack,
Ya drugs are an awful problem,
Don't know what we're gonna do,
Oughta hang them dealers,
'Course that's my point of view.
I guess ol' Bush is doin' his best,
The mess things are in,
Now you take that Savin's & Loan,
I wouldn't know where to begin.
Ya it's all a terrible mess,
I don't know what to think,
Bartender hand me a pack o' butts,
And pour us another drink.
Now take that feller, Noriega,
Finally got him in custody,
We'd a fixed him long ago,
If it'd been up to me,
It sure makes me nervous,
A feller sure cain't relax,
Somebody startin' a war,
Or congress votin' a new tax,
And this fuss about abortion,
You can say what you will,
But I can't see any problem,
If those gals would take the pill.
Foreign aid is out of hand,
All claimin' to be a friend.
We just keep dishin' it out,
There don't seem to be an end.
I see Gorbachev's got his problems,
All his folks a raisin' cain,
Tryin' to cut loose from Russia,
But guess he can't complain.
Ya, the world's in an awful mess,
What with all these high jinks,
Barkeep, will ya give me a light,
And pour us a couple of drinks?

MR. SOCIAL SECURITY
By Swede Eddy

I got my first job
In an old gold mine,
In the Black Hills of South Dakota
Back in nineteen thirty nine.
It was a good job,
Paid four bucks a day,
And I could hardly wait,
For my first day.
But my check was short,
Why should this be?
And the paymaster explained,
That's for Mr. Secur-ity.
I ask the paymaster,
Who in the world was he,
And he did his best,
To explain to me.
Says he, 'That's some feller,
That works for Frank Roosevelt,
And all you can do,
Is play the hand you're dealt.'
So I paid that hand,
Although it hurt to the core,
For each and every year,
He'd want more and more.
But now I've got the last laugh,
On old Mr. Secur-ity,
Now the shoe's on the other foot,
And the bugger works for me.
Yes, each and every month,
I get a pretty fair check,
And I guess that hand they dealt me,
Came from a pretty fair deck.
I don't know how long I'll live,
Long as I can, you bet,
And if the Lord is willing,
I'll get even yet.

DIETS
By Swede Eddy

I'm just a plain ol' country boy,
And don't have much schoolin',
All these diets got me confused,
And that ain't no foolin',
Back when we didn't get it,

Will they solve the problems of the world?

With all this health nut smut,
We felt pretty lucky,
To have something to fill our gut.
Cornmeal, beans and bacon,
Was our daily fare,
And if it wasn't good for us,
We didn't know and didn't care.
They say our air is contaminated,
How's it different from before?
Why worry about it,
We don't have any more.
Now there's water pollution,
And it too's bad for you,
Fat foods, nicotine and alcohol,
That's all bad stuff too.
We got our water from a dug well,
Didn't have all those tests,
So we just blew the scum of it,
And gratefully drank the rest.
Sometimes our ham was old,
And had a little green mold,
Ma just trimmed it up and fried it,
And we'd eat it hot or cold.
We didn't have athlete's foot,
Why? We didn't know,
It was because we didn't wear shoes,
Unless the ground was covered with snow.
We didn't have any social disease,
Weren't so many promiscuous maids,
Didn't know about gonorrhea or syphilis,
They hadn't yet invented AIDS.
Constipation was no problem,
Stomachache or a boil,
Mom's cure for everything,
Was a shot of castor oil.
Sometimes in the morning,
I'm a little slow,
Until I've had my caffeine and nicotine,
Then I'm ready to go.
They say because of my lifestyle,
I'm lucky to be alive,
But the last part of June this year,
I'll be sixty-five.
I'm gonna keep on eatin' and drinkin',
The things I always do,
Because a poor diet may kill you,
'Course worrin' about it will do it too.
I figure the good Lord has written,
My name in the book,
And no diets gonna keep me alive,
No matter how I feel or look.
I'll take the money I save,
That I'd spend on some health book,
And buy some delicious unhealthful food,
Whatever I want to cook.
They say I'm living in ignorance,
And live like this to no avail,
Maybe I'm ignorant, but happy,
And that's the end of my tale.

What can be more Western than a 'friendless, singing cowboy'?

THE FRIENDLESS COWBOY
By Lois Sperle

Unkempt looking cowboys used to come to town on Saturday night, so I wrote this poem about one.

I am a friendless, singing cowboy,
Just riding in the whining winds,
I sing to all the cute, you dogies
Because they are my only friends.

Now, some folks say that I am raunchy,
And that I have year-round B.O.
I bathe each day in mountain water,
So surely, dang it, that's not so.

My pretty wife has gone and left me,
She was the only one I had.
She said I was a no good bumpkin,
And sinful like my dear dad.

Some day I plan to go to heaven,
And meet my folks there at the door.
I hope my sinful ways have left me,
So then I'll have good friends galore.

Lois Sperle is a retired teacher who grew up in Filer.

Look out for short blonds

THE SHORT BLOND STRANGER
By Vickie McCaslin, Hagerman

The short, blond stranger rode into town,
No one knew just where he was bound.
With his six-shooter by his side,
Boy, how that short little guy could ride.
His trusted Welsh pony walked straight as could be,
Never throwing his head or stopping to pee.
People were lined on every street corner,
Watching and wondering, "Who was this foreigner?",
His tall white stetson shadowed his head,
Knowing he had nothing to dread.
He moved slowly towards the bank,
Stepped off his pony, he called Hank,
Crashing through the door he said, "The name's Jim Cricketts,
Do you sell Idaho Lottery tickets?"

Bizarre

They took mummy to the morgue

HOUSTON (AP) — Sharon Kopriva has seen her work — papier mache representations of mummies — on display at art galleries across the country, but never in a morgue. That's where one of her creations was taken by police.

The mummy art apparently was picked up by Houston police when they helped a landlord enter a residence to find out why water was leaking into an apartment below. They found a leaking aquarium and the mummy-like figure, according to The Houston Post.

The owner, who had purchased the piece from Ms. Kopriva in 1986, had left it there along with other property while moving to a new residence, Ms. Kopriva said.

Harris County Medical Examiner's office investigator Cecil Wingo would say little about the case, other than that it was much ado about nothing. He said he did not want to embarrass the legitimate art collector.

One official said the mummy was taken to the morgue to determine if it had human parts, and was merely a case where the police who found the figure didn't know anything about "bone anatomy."

Ms. Kopriva says people often mistake her artwork for real mummies, "but not for a very long time." "It's a very mummy-looking piece," the artist said of the 6-foot-tall figure.

Even a liberated woman would shriek

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Authorities have declared war on rats in Stockholm, where experts say there are two rats for every human.

The Svenska Dagbladet daily quoted officials as saying they expect it will take three years to bring the rats under control. Four "commando groups" will stalk the sewage system armed with rat poison, the newspaper said.

"We will open up 8,000 sewage outlets a year and put out rat poison," said Gyorgy Bellaagh of the Anticimex extermination company.

There are an estimated 2 million rats prowling Stockholm's cellars, sewage pipes and subway tunnels. Some apparently are abandoning their overcrowded subterranean domains for life above ground.

The ear is bionic

Sian Neame, aged two-and-a-half, at the Royal Victoria Eye and Ear Hospital, became the youngest person in the world to receive a bionic ear when surgeons implanted a small computer processor called the Cochlear into her skull behind the ear. Recipients of the device must be taught how to hear with it.

Man stayed in ultraviolet booth too long

MIAMI — Henry Homer, 90, walked to the second-floor dermatology department at Mount Sinai Medical Center, took off his clothes and stepped into an ultraviolet light booth for treatment of psoriasis.

He was supposed to be in the box for 20 seconds, said his son Mel. No one got him out. He stayed perhaps 20 minutes, then got out himself, said the son. "They put him in there and forgot about him." Homer, a retired Chicago furniture dealer, was admitted to the hospital and died in the intensive care unit.

The next day, Dr. Bruce Hyma of the Dade County Medical Examiner's Office performed an autopsy. Death was due to sepsis, what Hyma said was a general infection "caused by complications from first- and second-degree burns" over 90 percent of Homer's body. Contributory factors were psoriasis (a chronic skin condition characterized by red, scaly, itchy patches of skin) and cancer of the prostate, the autopsy said. Officially, Hyma ruled the death an accident.

For his 89th birthday Henry Homer took the entire family, 27 people including nine great-grandchildren, for a Caribbean cruise. For his 90th birthday last November, he repeated the trip. "He was not frail," said his son Don, 58, a real estate lawyer from Boca Raton.

Whatever you do, don't give OK signal

ATLANTA (AP) — You might as well call Scarlett O'Hara a Yankee as call a Soviet Georgian a Russian. And don't, please, circle your thumb and forefinger to tell a Soviet Georgian that it's OK with you.

Those were among the tips for 300 U.S. Georgians who are participating in the Friendship Force's largest single exchange of citizens between the United States and the Soviet Union, a Georgia-to-Georgia exchange April 17 to May 1.

The U.S. participants in their first meeting at Clark Atlanta University learned that it's the little things that count.

For example, the circled thumb and forefinger gesture, which means "OK" to a U.S. Georgian, is an obscene gesture in the Soviet republic where Atlanta's sister city, Tbilisi, is the capital.

Women in slacks are frowned upon.

The group also was told to expect much more hospitality from their hosts than they are used to, especially in drinking and making toasts. If they admire someone's painting or jewelry, it may be given to them on the spot.

Friendship Force officials reassured the group that the political situation seems to be stable in Soviet Georgia, which is one of several republics agitating for independence.

Among noted U.S. Georgians participating are Rosalynn Carter's mother, Allie Smith, Atlanta Mayor Maynard Jackson's daughter, Valerie Amanda Jackson, and Atlanta entertainers Liz Spraggins and Michael Cloud.

Nelson Eddy would be shocked

TORONTO — The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who passed into legend and history wearing scarlet tunics and Stetson-like hats as they always got their man, will be wearing turbans from now on.

Or at least some of them will, according to Canada's solicitor general, who has ruled that Sikh recruits to the fabled Mounties can wear the wrap turbans that 800 years of tradition in their religion requires.

The announcement by Pierre Cadieux ended eight months of bitter controversy that featured debate over the extent of racism in Canada, particularly in conservative rural areas of the increasingly multicultural western provinces of the country.

Only a handful of Sikh Canadians with origins in India have applied to join the 17,000-member uniformed RCMP force, but it was enough for a vocal minority in such areas as Alberta and Saskatchewan to mount a campaign that included lapel pins and calendars asking, "Is this Canadian, or does this make you Sikh?" with a racial slur appended.

Led by Herman Bitner, 43, a welder from Langdon, Alberta, more than 200,000 people signed petitions against turbans, declaring that the Mounted Police represent a symbol of pure Canada that should not be tampered with for any reason.

Polls have shown that the RCMP, whose official code is "Uphold the right," but whose unofficial motto is "The Mounties always get their man," is the most popular public institution in Canada.

But many law-enforcement experts contend that it is a respect based largely on Hollywood myth, an image created by Sergeant Preston and his husky, King, pursuing outlaws through the snowdrifts of the Yukon, and Nelson Eddy singing "When I'm Calling You" to Jeanette MacDonald in the 1936 film "Rose Marie."

Grab that branch

MADISON, Ill. (AP) — This suspected burglar really did go out on a limb. That's where police officers and tracking dogs located him, perched on a branch hanging over Horseshoe Lake.

The man fled Thursday after neighbors saw him and an accomplice trying to break into a vacant house, authorities said.

The accomplice was caught. The other suspect ran into the woods and climbed the tree when he saw the officers approaching.

"He was taunting the dogs and the police," Capt. Jack Fields of the Madison County sheriff's department said. "The limb broke and he fell into the water."

The man stayed in 4 feet of chilled water for 90 minutes until officers found a boat and paddled out, said Deputy Gerry Owens.

"Where Your Vision Is Precious Beyond Measure"

BOSTON (AP) — When people have too much cash on hand they take it to a bank. But what does a bank with too much money do?

New England banks with money to burn send those money stacks to the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. The reserve bank's primary function is to be a banker for other New England banks — lending money to those that need it and storing funds for those with excess cash, said Edward A. Romkey, an assistant vice president of the bank. It also detects filthy lucre — worn and dirty bills — and takes them out of circulation.

New England banks usually have too much cash during the ski season, summer vacations and Christmas, he said. "Any time currency use is up, counterfeiting is up. Counterfeiters have seasons, too," Romkey said. He said the bank sends 200 to 300 fake bills daily to the Secret Service.

The cash that arrives from New England banks is fed into eight Currency Verification and Counting System machines, which process 72,000 greenbacks hourly.

The machines scan the back of each bill much like a supermarket scanner reads a bar code and decide whether it is real and in good enough condition to go back into circulation. Clean bills get counted and shrink-wrapped.

Turtlemania takes a toll

WICHITA, Kan. — The Caldwell Ornate Box Turtle War may have claimed its first casualty — sixth-grade teacher Larry Miller's job.

Miller's students led the successful drive to have the turtle declared the state reptile in 1986. That led to a case of "turtlemania" among some in the Sumner County town of 1,400. A backlash followed.

The Board of Education has voted unanimously to suspend Miller with pay. Board President Gage Overall and school administrators declined to say why they suspended the veteran teacher.

But Miller's union representative, David Kirkbride, has a hunch. "All this is tied to the turtle controversy, that's my belief," Kirkbride said. "I'm not sure how it's connected at this point, but there has to be a connection."

The whole turtle controversy had simple beginnings. Back in late 1985 Miller's sixth-graders embarked on a science and civics lesson — lobbying the Kansas Legislature to have the turtle declared the state reptile. The next year they won, after a campaign of buttons, posters, T-shirts and hundreds of letters. In 1987 the mayor signed a turtle protection proclamation. At least one local merchant started selling turtle paraphernalia.

But a backlash started with anti-turtle jokes, T-shirts and buttons. Last year, rumors spread through the town that people were shooting turtles or running over them with cars, an activity people in town called "turtle popping." In late 1989, school administrators told Miller not to discuss the turtle controversy in his class.

Miller filed a grievance, arguing that the directive denied him his academic freedom. The school board did not agree, and voted against the grievance.

Dear Dave:

You are among that elite group of sales leaders who in 1989 demonstrated the "Will to Win" by outselling all domestic and import truck competitors in your assigned marketing area. In achieving the coveted status of sales leader you set the standard for all of us on the Chevrolet Team to follow.

On behalf of the entire team, I'd like to extend my appreciation and congratulations to you and your sales organization for a job well done!!

Yours truly,
